SEASONABLE

SUGGESTIONS

Memorial Day.

The florists' busiest season is now at hand. Of the several holidays, a greater amount of labor is involved in preparatory work for Memorial day than for any of the other great days, Easter itself not being excepted. Of course, to those specialists who handle only one flower, like roses or carnations, it may make but little difference, but to the grower who handles a little of everything and sells all he can at retail it entails an enormous amount of work. Bedding out, filling vases and window-boxes, cemetery planting, doing necessary cleaning up for many, and then the rush of orders for bouquets, wreaths and loose flowers of all kinds, makes the season a strenuous and trying one. When everyone wants his or her place planted and cleaned up for Memorial day, it means that many hours of overtime must be put in. Happily the florist is not as a rule hampered by trades union edicts, and long may he remain so. Pay your men who are faithful and industrious well for overtime worked. Do not make impossible promises to your customers, but try to please all you can, and you will do about all that it is possible for a man to do.

Saving Bulbs.

Some of your customers no doubt have tulips, hyacinths and other bulbs in beds to be planted with geraniums or cannas. No doubt some of them will have the idea that if these are dug up, the tops cut off and the roots laid by in the cellar to dry, they can be planted again in October to make a gorgeous show another spring. Do not encourage them in any such delusions; sell them fresh bulbs next fall. But if it is intended to save the bulbs, lift them carefully with the foliage and replant rather thickly in some dry and shady spot until the foliage has dried down, when they may be lifted and stored. Hyacinth bulbs are of little value for bedding a second season. Tulips do fairly well, while narcissi and crocus flower very well.

Form of Beds.

Before planting out any bedding stock the beds should be liberally manured and spaded over. The usual practice is to have them pyramided in the centers for the sake of appearance. This is a big mistake. Such beds are difficult to keep moist, for if once allowed to bake, rain-falls all run off to the sides. The persistent sprinkling with the hose will soon harden the surface of any border, but it is hard to teach amateurs that the intelligent use of a hoe is better for promoting plant growth than nightly wettings overhead.

Cannas and Geraniums.

The two principal bedding plants for flower effects are cannas and geraniums, the latter being, of course, in greatest demand. In the case of the latter, it is much better to have beds of one shade of color rather than to have lines or bands of a variety of shades. Scarlet and white can be used in the same bed, but scarlet and pink should never be together. Those who prefer a light edging can have that useful variegated variety, Mme. Salleroy. In the case of cannas, while a mixture does not look well, alternate rings of scarlet and yellow do not look bad. A large oval bed of, say, Alphonse Bouvier, with a thick double row of a good yellow around it, looks well and the colors reversed are equally good.

Coleus and Alternantheras.

No doubt some of your customers will insist upon beds of coleus and alternantheras. They grow readily and soon cover the space allotted them. But they are not satisfying, as are the flowering beds.

Do not on any consideration use lines of coleus, geraniums, ageratums and similar stock to produce a bold show. Foliage and flowering plants do not harmonize and should be separated. Solid beds of verbenas, Drummond's phlox, nasturtiums and petunias are in excellent taste, and mixed colors of any of these look well. Nasturtiums prefer rather poor soil or they will make rank growth at the expense of flower. Any of the four plants named are also good for scattering in clumps or lines along shrubberies. Nicotiana Sanderae and N. affinis are good for massing effects, preferring a little shade. Begonia Erfordii, Vernon and La Vesuve make excellent solid beds and nice edgings. Tuberous-rooted begonias succeed well only where they get protection from the hot midday sun.

Vases.

When it comes to filling vases, remember that as the body of soil is necessarily small, it should be well enriched to carry the plants successfully through the season. Here again it is much better to use one variety and color of plant than a massy mixture. Be sure you give geraniums a good, sunny location. In heavy shade use green foliage plants or such shade-loving subjects as tuberous begonias. Cannas also need plenty of sunlight. Dracena indivisa is the centerpiece par excellence for vase work. Phoenix Canariensis and P. rupicola are satisfactory palms. Latania Borbonica is so heavy in foliage that it smothers plants below it. Kentias cannot be successfully used unless it is a shaded and wind-proof location. In large vases, where a miscellaneous mixture is wanted, use such subjects as cannas, Curculigo recurvata, Grevillea robusta and crotons with narrow foliage, and for edging Asparagus Sprengeri, variegated vinca, English ivy, Abutilon Savitzii and ivy-leaved geraniums. The last named, by the way, make excellent vases by themselves.

Window-Boxes.

In the case of window or veranda-boxes, which steadily increase in popularity, much of the foregoing material may be used. In addition, nasturtiums, verbenas and petunias are all good and the three latter flowers make splendid individual boxes, flowering all summer long. If the location is fairly well shaded, nephrolepis ferns will succeed well and we have seen splendid adiantums, cyrtomiums and other varieties in some places. We have not named fuchsias, which flower well for a time. Our hot summers make it an impossibility to flower these as they are seen in Europe, and for the same reason it is useless to put in Lady Washington geraniums, for although they will make a brave show at the outset, they will at best last but a few weeks. Blue lobelia, also so beautiful across the ocean, does but indifferently here, and the golden calceolarias seen all over Britain are impossibilities here.

For scented flowers, use some heliotropes and don't forget a plant or two of scented geranium or lemon verbena.

Hydrangea hortensis, especially the blue and pink forms of Otaksa, are often used in big vases and make a fine immediate show, but they are too heavy for boxes of any kind. For piazza use, in tubs or boxes, and sunk in the lawns at intervals, they are, however, very effective, especially when they reach a large size and carry several hundred heads each.

Stock Plants.

While catering to the wants of your customers, do not for one moment forget the necessity of reserving ample stock of the various plants for yourselves another season. Nothing adds more to a floral establishment than a few well planted flower beds and a well trimmed lawn. It is a living and telling advertisement and may mean many additional orders for you another year.

Do not throw pots all over the place.

firmly around the plants and leave the surface soil loose. Plants set out with dust dry balls are going to be sick-looking objects for many a day.

Brief Reminders.

Keep the cultivator or hoe constantly flying among all growing crops. The more persistently you stir the ground, the less will insects harass them and the faster the plants will grow.

It will pay to cut many of the late tulips, narcissi, valley, iris, peonies and other outdoor flowers and place in a cold room a few days before Memorial day. A hot wave or thunder rains may spoil them on the plants.

Another sowing of asters is now seasonable. Prick out earlier batches before they become crowded.

Gladiali will now be several inches high. Where planted early, later plantings made now will prove useful in September.

Plant out your single-stemmed mums before they become potbound. You can still propagate and secure nice blooms, but cuttings wilt quickly now, under the hot sun, and need more watering than earlier in the season. Try a coldframe facing north for them.

Keep gardenia cuttings well soaked with water and, after potting, syringe several times a day until well established.

Give cyripediums of the insigne section a frame or north house. They dislike coddling and want an airy situation.

Utilize any spare coldframes to grow young ferns, such as nephrolepis and day and plan to increase your stock of them another year.

Keep gloxinias well shaded. Do not syringe overhead. Feed when flower buds are showing.

Pot off Primula Sinensis and P. obconica and keep well shaded in a cool, light house.

It is now a good time to propagate snapdragons to plant in benches for blooming at Christmas. Select the best colors and the most vigorous plants for cuttings.

BEDDING PLANTS.

[A paper by Thomas H. Westwood, read before the Gardeners' and Florists' Club of Boston, May 21, 1907.]

Burns, in his epistle to a young friend, begins by saying:

I lang hae thought, my youthful friend,
A something to have sent you,
Tho' it should serve nae ither end
Than just a kind memento.
But how the subject-theme may gang,
Let time and chance determine.
Perhaps it may turn out a sang,
Perhaps turn out a sermon.

Bedding plants are the plants of the masses. They are widely distributed. They are to be seen in the palace and they adorn the hovel. They bring light with their cheerful coloring. They fill the air with their sweet fragrance. Their reasonable cost brings them within the reach of all who love the beautiful. They do not seem to resent the ill treatment that is so often given them, but show forth their glory under great difficulties.

Growing an Art.

We are not to enter into a discussion on growing bedding plants, but will say in passing, to grow this class of plants successfully is just as much a fine art as it is to grow many of the more costly plants that receive such skilful treatment from the skilled artist. "Anybody can grow a geranium," is an old saying, as well as a false one. The great height that some of them attain shows us that "anybody" is still around growing them.

There most surely is a place for the extensive use of these plants, grown in such abundance that they really come within the reach of all mankind. We commend the work that has been done by Mrs. Jack Gardner in interesting the people in a certain part of our city to grow this class of plants in window-boxes. We congratulate the people of North Easton for the work being done there. The children's garden work ought to be encouraged. The care which the child gives to the garden is well spent, both from a moral and mental standpoint, and the development of plant life teaches precious lessons to the observant child. Here is an avenue of usefulness opening to our club and we hope that something will be done along the line of cleaning up the front yards and back yards of our city and suburbs. Perhaps by offering prizes for the best kept yards, or furnishing plants to those who are not able to pay for them, but who wish to improve their environment, we can further the work.

Commendable Arrangements.

The arrangement of bedding plants is a subject about which a great deal may be said and this seems to be an opportune time to discuss this great question. Strange to say, our amateur friends come in for a great deal less criticism than do our professional friends. The Hire a boy to wheel them away, where they are to be stored.

The weather is now getting much warmer and plants in small pots will need lots of water. Where you have sold large quantities out of the various batches, stand the remainder closer together to economize in watering. Above all things, never plant out anything, either for customers or yourself, unless the balls are wet. Always press the soil adiantums. Place them on a bed of ashes, sprinkle lime around to kill any snails, shade the sashes well and you will find they do much better there than in the greenhouses.

Do not plant out bouvardias until well hardened. The last of the month is as early as it is safe to plant outdoors.

amateur arranges his plants as if they had dropped from the clouds. There seems to be an abandonment about the arrangement that is refreshing.

Let us turn and see what is being done in our own ranks and let us discuss some of the bedding that is to be seen in and around Boston. Of course, where there is so much money spent, and bedding done on such a large scale, we look to our city gardens for enlightenment. We look for effects that come as near to nature as one can come along bedding lines. We do not see enough grouping of plants of one variety. We see a good deal of grouping of plants that are at variance with each other. Ficus elastica, Celosia cristata, crotons, Euonymus radicans and echeverias in one group is certainly mixing things and is certainly a poor example, at least for educational purposes.

We believe that plants of one variety in a group will give a more pleasing effect than a mixture of plants that seem to be antagonistic, one to the other.

Geraniums.

We believe there are more geraniums grown for bedding than any other variety of bedding plants and that they are the most difficult to arrange. It is easy for the colors to clash and to place the bed in the poorest situation one can find. The semi-doubles are our favorites. As far as possible we use one variety on an avenue. Never mix the scarlet and pink. If you have to mix your varieties, use for a dark mixture, S. A. Nutt, Alphonse Ricard and Bishop Wood. For a light mixture use Poitevine, Mme. Thibaut and a good white variety. We never use the variegated varieties for edging; in fact, we do not grow them.

Cannas.

The canna is the greatest acquisition for this class of work that has been sent out for many a year. They have a tropical appearance and are worth growing for the foliage alone, but some of the varieties have striking flowers. A group of Admiral Dewey makes a handsome bed. A group of Alphonse Bouvier planted six feet apart, some of the plants being set to the outer edge of the bed, and filled in with Vernon begonias is superb.

This leads us up to tropical effects, the grandest of all our work, when one knows how to arrange such groups. Musa Ensete makes an imposing subject for tropical beds. We do not use any plants with variegated foliage, but depend upon varied shaped leaves for effect. Better have one good sized group than several small beds scattered around the place. Plant large Musa Ensete widely apart throughout the bed in an irregular form, some of them coming to the outer edge of the bed. These musas are ten feet to twenty feet in height. Plant some good canna around the largest musas, Cyperus alternifolius around others; Alocasia arborea, with its large leaves; Dracæna indivisa, good sized plants; Pennisetum Rupelliana, with its waving plumes and grassy foliage; Aralia Sieboldii, Carex Japonica, a dwarf grass. Cureuligo recurvata is an interesting plant for this work, planted toward the outside of the group so that its foliage will be above its dwarf neighbors. When the air is still and all around is quiet this plant will move just like the pendulum of a clock. It will suggest that the place is a well regulated one and always on the move.

Crotons.

Crotons as bedders in the vicinity of Boston do not color up, but I believe this is in their favor. We do not believe the bright coloring of the croton suggests healthfulness, but instead, we are impressed with the fact that nature is having a hard struggle with this child of hers and, in spite of the old dame, the child develops red blotches and yellow streaks. Our Boston crotons outside are demure looking and dignified specimens, refusing to put on a gaudy attire, which is certainly to their credit. We would not advise going into this class of bedding too extensively. We do not approve of planting so closely together that the individual is merged into the whole. Give a little room to show forth the habit of the plant. At the same time, this adds grace to the arrangement. Use the old Peristrophe angustifolia for covering the ground, and the bed is finished.

Begonias.

Begonias are becoming popular as bedders and are being used in great quantities. The leader, in our estimation, is Vesuvius, having a fuchsia-like habit. The flowers make quite a display. Altogether this is a charming plant for outside work and cannot be recommended too highly. Our Mr. Sander's variety of Erfordii is a splendid begonia, flowers of a light pink, and enjoys the sunshine. The red Erfordii gives great promise. Its foliage takes on a beautiful bronze after being planted out, and the red flowers make a beautiful combination. We predict a great future for the begonia as a bedder.

Carpet Bedding.

Carpet bedding is not so popular as of yore, but there is a great deal of it done and there is more of it overdone. Many gardeners make poor work of their design work. It is a great relief to one, when he knows he has not to erect a white elephant or a gate far enough ajar to allow the elephant to pass through. We believe those who do this kind of work are working along lines that are more artistic and sublime, rather than the monstrous and profane. But we believe there is still some of it done that is apt to cause one to express his opinions in language bordering on the profane, even in this enlightened age.

How ridiculous to make these serpentine lines in the grass, Copley square being a horrible example a few years ago. Rather have a large bed, with the design worked out with the plants, but after all your time and energy is spent, how artificial it all is and how little enjoyment you get out of all the patience and thought that one must put into such work. I must say it takes painstaking and thoughtful study to work out a bed of this kind, both on the plan and in the execution of the work.

Needless it is to say that coleus arrangements have almost disappeared. We have seen Salvia splendens planted through shrubby borders. It certainly looked as if the shrubs or the salvias were not at home; we said the latter. Bedding plants of any variety are out of place used in this way. We only mention a few varieties of bedding plants that we may confine this paper to a few minutes in reading. We might go on indefinitely discussing bedding plants, their uses and abuses.

FLORISTS TO ADVISE.

The amendment to the general appropriation bill for the Illinois State Experiment Station, which provides $7,500 per annum for two years for the study of the problems of greenhouse owners, places the direction of the expenditure in the hands of the Illinois State Florists' Association. It will be the duty of President Albert T. Hey to appoint an advisory board of five members. This board will meet twice a year at Champaign and the expenses of the board will be defrayed from the appropriation.

PRIMULA OBCONICA.

I have a few Primula obconica left over. What is the best way to keep these plants during the hot summer months? Some are now in 5-inch pans and some in 3-inch and 4-inch pots. I generally use them for cut flowers in the winter.

H. H.

The plants in question can be carried over successfully and will make splendid specimens for next winter. Probably they are pretty well potbound now and will need a shift. Remove the drainage and loosen up the balls a little with a pointed stick. Use a compost of two-thirds pasture loam, fairly well rotted, one-third old dried cow manure, and a sprinkling of sand and leaf-mold. Place the plants in a coldframe after potting. Shade the sashes and pull them off on dull days and at night. Give them a further shift, if required. About the middle of August give them a light spraying over on warm evenings and you will have some handsome plants before fall. When well rooted in the pots, occasional applications of manure water will be found beneficial. If you have no coldframe at disposal, stand the plants under a tree with rather high, overhanging branches. We have seen excellent ones grown in such a location until the end of September.

SEASONABLE WORK.

How quickly the months roll around and the violet grower finds himself up to the planting time of the next season's stock! There is always the danger, where one does not make a specialty of violets, of postponing or slighting this work, owing to the many things that need doing at this time of the year, but, if you are going to grow a house of them, you can better afford to neglect something else than not to give them the proper start and attention whenever they need it.

If you have not already thoroughly cleaned up the house that you are going to devote to them, you ought to do so at once. If you have previously had violets in the house and grown them in borders, at least six inches of the soil should be wheeled out, after having pulled up all the old plants and cremated them, and I would emphasize this point, as they are very liable to spread disease if heaped up and left to decay anywhere about the place, to say nothing about the unsightliness of them. Then, while this reiteration may seem hackneyed, yet now is the time to go over the house in a thorough manner, making all the repairs or improvements needed for next year before you get the new soil in. It is seldom that a border, if of brick or concrete, does not need a little work where it has been broken in some way. Or, if of wood, it is likely that some new pieces should be inserted, or some hose bib should be relocated for greater convenience, or some heating pipe or pipes should be graded anew; missing glass must be replaced, or, last but not least, the woodwork should be treated to a fresh coat of white paint, as no house can be too light and sweet for the dark winter days when we are looking for all the flowers we can possibly get.

After having done all these things and having given the house several heavy sulphur fumigations, you will be ready to proceed to filling the house. First cover all the border with a coating of lime, enough to whiten it, and then, using a fine spray nozzle, moisten it enough to thoroughly slake it. This is sweetening and will kill anything that may have previously escaped. This may be raked into the bottom soil with an iron rake and you can then wheel in the soil that you have previously had prepared.

I suppose it is needless to mention that the soil should not be stepped on or wheeled over after being brought in. However, some careless boy or man may do so unless watched or warned, but if the work is begun at the far end of the house there should be no occasion to have to get on to it. In this connection let me caution you also not to bring the soil in if too wet, as a few days' delay is better than to ruin the soil by handling it when in this condition.

R. E. SHUPHELT.

DAHLIAS FOR MASSING.

It is a mistake to assume that dahlias are simply good for furnishing cut flower material, or at most for the planting in borders by amateurs and enthusiasts of another calibre. They are also commendable for formal beds, if the right kinds are selected, and for that purpose perhaps the decorative is the most suitable type. The two varieties especially well adapted for such use are Catherine Duer and Fire Rain, the former a favorite in Newport for several years for all purposes, and the latter a recent introduction by Henry A. Dreer, of Philadelphia.

The pompon dahlias are also appropriate for bedding. Many of them are not rank growers and their flowers are diminutive and peculiarly attractive when the plants are in masses.

When such use is made of dahlias they, of course, need some kind of support, but that can be given them without it being objectionably noticeable, as often dahlia stakes are when seen in single rows or in borders on private places. All that is necessary is a limited number of stakes, with the addition of a few wires.

R. R.

EARLY PLANTING.

The benefits to be derived from early planting are many and lasting. The young stock gets the advantage of the best growing season and has more time in which to make a thrifty bush before taking a first cut. Where a system of record keeping is strictly enforced, the cut taken from houses planted in May will, by the end of the season, show a vast superiority, both in quantity and quality, all other conditions being equal, over those planted in July. Young stock in pots is also liable to suffer during hot weather and will succeed much better in the bench.

Repairing the benches consumes considerable time which can ill be spared at this season, but as it is essential that a bench which is intended to bear a season's crop should be sufficiently strong and stable, a little care should be used so that the bench may not break down in midwinter.

After being repaired, they should be thoroughly washed with a good force of water, sufficient to reach every crevice, and if the benches are of wood they should get a thorough coating of hot lime wash. This, while acting as a preservative of the wood, will also act as a disinfectant and destroyer of fungous growths, insects, their eggs, etc.

The sashbars also should receive a thorough cleaning of all the scum and dirt which has accumulated during the season, and should be painted if necessary. The old soil from under the benches should also be removed and everything made clean and tidy.

The cracks in the bottom of the bench should be covered with some material, such as wheat or rye straw, to keep the soil from running through until it gets set.

The distances at which the different varieties are set apart differs in different localities, because of different qualities of soil, water and local conditions. Bride, Maid, Richmond, Kaiserin and Golden Gate should at least have one square foot in which to grow, and if grafted stock is used they ought to have at least one-third more room. Beauties require one and one-half square feet of space.

To hasten the young stock and to give stamina to the young growth, one pound of bone meal can be added to each cubic yard of compost; or, if spread on the surface of the bench just previous to planting, twenty pounds to a bench $4\frac{1}{2} \times 100$ feet is plenty at this time. There is no necessity for stirring it into the soil, as enough will lodge around the roots while planting, and the subsequent stirring of the soil and watering will carry the remainder deep enough for the roots to find it.

Having all in readiness for planting, the manual part of the work is practically completed, and the planting, which is a simple operation, can be done with ease and leisure.

RIBES.

ROSE FRAU KARL DRUSCHKI.

Like the farmers in Virgil, and in our own days, rosarians have generally a complaint against the climate, says a writer in a British gardeners' magazine. In 1906 in the fine weather roses had a good innings, but to the grower of hybrid perpetuals, either for garden decoration or exhibition, the season was an unsatisfactory one.

The great exception was Frau Karl Druschki. I will not enter into a disputation here as to whether this grand rose is correctly classified. It is enough for me to know that it is as free-flowering as the best of the hybrid teas, as hardy as any of the hybrid perpetuals, and as vigorous as many a so-called climbing rose. Seldom, indeed, does a rose leap into such universal popularity in so brief a space of time. Such a feat clearly demonstrates how great is the demand for varieties of good growth, unquestioned hardiness, floriferous habit and fine color.

The advent of Frau Karl Druschki marked an important stage in the evolution of the rose, and, although Peter Lambert was not, I am led to understand, its actual raiser, but only its introducer, his name will be handed down along with those of Jacotot and Guillot of Gloire de Dijon and La France fame respectively. Chief among its good qualities is its amenability to almost any soil or situation.

GARDENIAS IN ROSE HOUSE.

Can gardenias be grown on a side bench in a rose house? When is the best time to plant them? M. G.

While gardenias can be grown in a rose house, they will do much better in a higher temperature. A minimum of not less than 60 degrees is necessary, but 5 degrees higher is better. If you decide to plant them in a rose house, choose the warmest end of the house and, if steam or hot water pipes are laid below the bench to give a little bottom heat, all the better. The present month or June is the best time to plant. Stock from $2\frac{1}{2}$ -inch or 3-inch pots is suitable and be careful not to overwater after planting or it may bring on an attack of the yellows, so often seen. C. W.

TOPPING YOUNG PLANTS.

Will some one explain when and how far carnations should be cut back? The young plants are in pots and are eight inches high. I have cut the leaves back a little. This is my first year in raising carnation plants. I am also in doubt about my mums. They are twelve inches high, on own roots. I am afraid they will get too tall. What is the best way to get rid of black fly on mums?

W. U.

To trim the leaves of your young carnation plants will not cause them to break. You must take out the whole top of the plant and cut it down in the stem between two joints. On most varieties it is best to leave from five to six joints, which will be about four or five inches above the pot. Do this at once if the stem shows between the leaves, and get them planted out as quickly as possible. When they get to growing well in the field they will need to be topped closer. Watch these notes, as I will have more to say on this subject in due time.

If your mums are drawing up, get them spread apart so they can grow heavier. Plant them in the bench where they are to flower, or if you cannot do that, then repot into larger pots; they will likely need a shift. I take it that they are to be grown for cut blooms on a bench. You can top mums and make them grow into bush form, as many branches as you like, by merely taking off the top of each shoot whenever you want them to break. Avoid cutting back into the hard wood, as the breaks will not come so readily, nor will they be as strong as from the young, tender growth.

Tobacco in any form will destroy the black aphid as readily as it does the green ones. A. F. J. BAUR.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

Topping.

Upon the attention given to topping in the field depends the future shape of the plant, and this, in turn, has much to do with its productiveness.

Primarily, the operation of topping may be said to be carried on for the purpose of diverting the plant's efforts in blooming, so as to increase the number of shoots desired to be brought into bloom later. In bringing about this result one must remember the strain that is to come during the winter months, striving in every way to produce vigor and conserve energy.

The mere fact that topping has been religiously observed while the plants are in the field is no guarantee of their subsequent good behavior. The attention must be intelligent and considerable thought must be given the matter, for there can be no arbitrary rule laid down which seems to most concern the beginner, but if the first top, made some time before planting out, was properly done and one will profit by observation, there need be no hesitation.

The best course of instruction one can take in carnation plant building is to grow about a hundred plants from seed, allowing them their freedom the first summer. At lifting time select about twenty-five of those you have observed to be the most widely separated in habit of growth. Bench and grow these long enough to propagate a few from each.

The young stock will furnish a good field for experiment, besides being a pleasant diversion from the everlasting grind. GEO. S. OSBORN.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Shading the Blooming Stock.

The weather has been so unsettled this spring that one could not go by the date to any great extent, but had to simply take things as they came along and judge as best he could as to what conditions would likely follow in the near future. So it has been this season with shading the blooming stock. In March the weather was hot enough to have justified one in putting on some shade, shoot the shading material high up in the air and let it come down on the glass like rain. This will make countless little spots on the glass, and with a little practice you can get it quite evenly all over the house. We have found nothing better than the old-fashioned lime wash. If you want it to be quite temporary, use air-slaked lime and water. If you want it to stick, then use fresh lime and slake it with water.

There are many other materials used for shading, one of the most popular being white lead and naphtha. This makes a splendid shading material when it is to be permanent, and it is easier on the paint on the sashbars than lime. When you want it off, however, you must rub it off with a brush, as a rain will not affect it in the least. A. F. J. BAUR.

PREPARING SOIL.

We are sending you this box of soil and would like your advice in preparing it for carnations and Sprengeri greens. The sod was plowed up last fall, six inches deep, and put in a pile with a scraper, and now we are working it over with a plow and harrow. Please advise us what proportions of bone meal and manure are required, and also how much as to how often to top, the weather and the nature of the soil having great influence on growth.

Then we have the characteristics peculiar to each variety, some being naturally bushy, others sprawly. In visiting different growers my attention is sometimes called to a plant and the question is put, "How would you top this one?" Unless positive of the variety, I always ask about it before going further.

The operation is one which cannot be well fitted into any routine; that is, we are unable to select any certain day in the week and top, whether or not any more than one hundred blooms can be cut from an equal number of plants on a certain day every week. For general guidance a few remarks will perhaps be of assistance.

Go over the plants often—two or three times a week—topping those showing formation of stem between the leaves, and, at the risk of being insistent, I would request that you use a sharp knife.

Be careful to leave no tops or leaves so removed to remain on the ground and decay; also keep the field clear of dead or diseased plants.

How high or low to top is the question except for the likelihood of just such weather as did follow last month and this, when even a light shade on the glass would have done more harm than good.

Usually we find the middle of April about the time when the first shade is needed, but not so this year. The sun is getting so strong now, however, that even though the nights may be cool and some of the days cloudy, when it does shine it bleaches the buds that show color, and also the partly opened blooms, quite badly. Especially is this true of Mrs. Lawson, and a light shade should be put on if it has not already been done. In fact, all the pinks, both light and dark, will have better color from now on if shaded somewhat. The white and scarlet would better be left unshaded, if practical, as long as the weather is not actually hot. If the soil has not been allowed to become exhausted and water is applied liberally, the quality will be good unless it gets considerably hotter than we have had it as yet. So this shade should be merely for the benefit of the color and should be light.

Use a common brass hand syringe; sand is necessary. We intend to take it into the houses in July, and plant the carnations in it about August 1. H. B.

The texture of the soil you send is fairly good and if prepared properly should grow good stock. I would have handled it differently, however, from what you have done. Seeing that it is not of extra quality, I should have begun preparing at once, instead of scraping it into a pile without adding any manure. You should have added at once about one-fourth its bulk of cow manure, or good stable manure with straw bedding. I can not see how you can benefit it much with plow and harrow if it is in a pile of any depth. Get some men at it with shovels and have them pile it over clear to the bottom, after first spreading on the manure. Let them mix it thoroughly and break up all the larger lumps. No sand will be needed and the bone is better mixed in after the soil is spread on the benches. For the carnations use about thirty pounds of bone to 500 square feet of bench. Later you can give another dressing if deemed advisable.

Sprengeri will stand several times as much feeding as carnations, later on, but this soil will do nicely for them to start in.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

Mrs. Jennie P. Snow, Sharon, Mass., registers Carnation Andrew Carnegie, a red sport of Harlowarden, a perfect glowing scarlet, good keeper and fine shipper, much freer than Harlowarden and a continuous bloomer with a perfect non-bursting calyx.

This name is used provisionally, to be approved or rejected at the next annual meeting of the society.

A TYPICAL ESTABLISHMENT.

The accompanying illustrations are reproduced from photographs taken at the establishment of J. F. Sked, Westerville, O. There are mammoth expanses of glass devoted to cut flowers, and little places just starting, but Mr. Sked has an establishment typical of the great majority in the business. He does a large local business in miscellaneous stock, and a wholesale trade in certain specialties. He says the season thus far has been much against the local business. I have carnations until Decoration day; then plant ferns. One solid bed I use for early tomatoes, which I plant in February, transplant into boxes, taking to frames in March. Along the west side of the house I have 6-foot hotbeds, which I plant with pansies and early cabbage, peppers, etc. Owing to the late season I have been cutting the pansy blooms, which find ready sale. I have a local market for all the geraniums, lettuce and, in fact, all the output, but surplus finds ready customers by using the classified advertisements in the REVIEW.

"I shall raise more geraniums and discard small stock that is not so salable. In potting my geraniums to 3-inch and 4-inch I use excelsior around the pots. It gives enough air and at the same time keeps the moisture. Every three or four weeks I move the geraniums, taking all dead leaves and giving more room. I find Poitevine, Nutt, Doyle, Viaud, Perkins and Buchner will answer for any customers. I have for Decoration day one bench of 5-inch which is one mass of bloom and bud. They retail readily for 25 cents to 40 cents. Hanging baskets and boxes are all the rage. Boxes three to four feet long and six inches wide, filled with vincas, geraniums and so on, sell very Clematis Henryi, which has neat white flowers, both producing a mass of rich color when in bloom.

SHADING.

Will you please give directions for shading houses containing mixed collections of plants?
E. D. P.

A mixture of kerosene oil and white lead makes an excellent shading for all classes of plants. It either can be put on with a long-handled whitewash brush or syringed on with a force-pump. For palms, ferns and other foliage plants a much heavier shade is needed than for a general run of commercial flowering plants. Do not use lime wash, as it eats away the paint from the woodwork. If you want a green shade for palms and ferns, mix some dry chrome green with the kerosene and lead, but be sure not to use any linseed oil or the shading will be difficult to remove.

ALL THE DIFFERENCE.

As illustrating the difference between taking good care of stock and neglecting it for just a few days at a time, a large grower calls attention to his experience this year with antirrhinum.

Bench of Geraniums May 1.

ness, freezing weather having been experienced as late as May 12. However, carnations planted in the field May 1 show no ill effects of the wintry weather. As a result of the backward spring the houses are badly crowded, for the young stock has attained a size greater than usual before it is moved outside. The illustrations show how the capacity of the greenhouses is increased by the use of frames. There are forty sashes 3x6 filled with pansies. One house 16x85 is devoted to general stock and two houses 12x75 are filled with geraniums, lettuce, tomato and cabbage plants. One of the illustrations shows a bench ninety feet long filled with geraniums in 3-inch and 4-inch pots which were ready May 1 for filling orders for bedding out.

In describing his routine Mr. Sked says: "I have three houses, one 16x75 for general stock being the middle house. The two outside houses are 12x80. On each side of each house there are raised benches four and one-half feet wide. These are devoted to lettuce from October to February 20. Then I pot to 3-inch all geraniums, placing them close and repotting to 4-inch later. On solid readily for $1 to $1.50, giving good profit.

"I have a hot water system and heat by gas at 18 cents per thousand feet, and profitable at that."

VINES FOR THE VERANDA.

Every possessor of a house with a porch, whether in city, suburb, or country, should be made to realize the opportunity he has, with the help of nature and the florist, to make it a delicious and beautiful, cool, green, shady retreat, says the National Council of Horticulture. Vines will transform any porch into a bower. To have vigorous vines plenty of rich soil is needed, and it is best to insure this by adding plenty of cow manure or bone meal to make it rich. Good drainage, as in any flower garden, is also essential.

The number of useful varieties of vines is large and many are quite inexpensive. Among the best are the clematises, well worthy of a place on the most beautiful verandas, especially the flowering varieties such as Clematis Jackmanni, which has purple flowers, and Early in the season, before the spring rush began, he took good care of his stock, with the result that the spikes were straight and well developed and sold quickly at $2 per dozen, wholesale. Then the rush of planting outdoors came on and for a few days the antirrhinums were neglected. They were not staked as carefully as they should have been and, while the stems were straight, the spikes of blooms became twisted and out of shape, with the result that it was almost impossible to find a market for them. The buyers would not take them, even at 50 cents a dozen.

Some growers think it economy to run their places with as little help as possible, but it is often noted that the growers who have the most, and best, help are the ones who are producing the largest crop, the most steady crop and the best average quality. They are the ones who get the money.

LONGIFLORUMS IN ENGLAND.

The quantity of Japan Lilium longiflorum and its varieties being disposed of during the present season in the London and provincial markets is almost incredible, and the sales are made at remunerative prices. Good stuff, well grown and nicely bloomed, in 5-inch pots, one large or two small bulbs in each, make from 6 shillings to 12 shillings per box of half a dozen pots. One of our most skilful growers easily clears thirty dozen or so every market morning. At this time of the year they are, of course, fresh-forced bulbs. The first lots of retarded are now being taken from the cold stores and will not be in bloom until August, when the last of the fresh bulbs will be finishing up.

The most skilful growers, by using the retarded and fresh bulbs, are now able to have them in bloom all the year round. The last frozen bulbs come out of the stores during October and bloom the following March, at which time the first batches of forced fresh bulbs are well into bloom.

The demand for longiflorums, blooms and pot plants, is rapidly on the increase in England, now that the retarded stock can be grown in large or small quantities so easily and successfully, and as a result of the greater demand for the bulbs the importation prices for best stuff rule high and the supply is in no way more than equal to the demand.

THE DEATH ROLL.

Arthur Bryant.

Arthur Bryant, senior member of the nursery firm of Arthur Bryant & Son, he had been considered to be in reasonably good health and was able to give his time to his business. He leaves his wife, four sons and three daughters.

Mr. Bryant was born October 15, 1834, in a log cabin on the old homestead two miles south of Princeton. He acquired his early education in the public schools and continued his study under the direction of Rev. A. B. Church and James Smith, of Princeton. In 1864 he married Miss Elizabeth Hughes and the early years of his married life were spent on the old home place. He purchased the piece of ground where the nursery is now located in 1868, and moved to this place with his family in 1875, where he spent the rest of his life. He was an extensive grower of peonies.

As early as 1866 his name is to be found in the membership list of the State Horticultural Society, and in 1868 he attended the first meeting and became a member of the Horticultural Society of Northern Illinois. In 1871 he was elected vice-president of the northern society, and in 1882 was elected president, and from this time on until 1898 he served almost continuously, either as president or vice-president of this society. An active, working member of the state society, in 1886 he served as its president, and from 1891 to 1897 he filled the office of treasurer. By virtue of his office in the northern society he was a member of the executive board of the state society, and therefore had an important part in shaping the horticultural work of the state. It was durtion and which gave the state such a reputation horticulturally. His acquaintance with the early horticulturists was an extended one, and this, with his familiarity with the early history of the state, horticulturally, caused him to be called on frequently, during the later years of his life, for horticultural and biographical sketches, and he also wrote occasionally on technical subjects. At the semi-centennial of the Illinois State Horticultural Society he was assigned the history and biography for the first twenty years, and his paper read on that occasion was a valuable contribution to the horticultural history of the state. It was during his service as a member of the executive board that the system of experimental stations in Illinois, under the direction of the state board, was inaugurated, and a station was established under his charge at Princeton, and it still is in existence, and with one exception is the only one left of the original stations. His knowledge of fruits and intimate acquaintance with varieties of trees made his work in this line very valuable and his opinion and judgment in such matters much sought after. Never working as an originator of new fruits, he was instrumental in distributing many new and valuable varieties. For several years Mr. Bryant had been a member of the advisory committee of the state experiment station at Champaign. Thus for forty years he had an active part in the horticultural development of this state to an extent which few of his fellow citizens realize.

Hendrick Van Waveren.

Hendrick Van Waveren, of Hillegom, Holland, died March 24, at the advanced age of 96 years. He was the founder of the widely known firm of Van Waveren Bros., bulb growers.

E. Mertens.

E. Mertens, one of the most eminent of European landscape gardeners and nurserymen, died at Zurich, Switzerland, March 23, at the age of 60 years. He was born at Brussels. He was the creator of the famed Quay gardens at Zurich, and laid out innumerable gardens and parks in other parts of Switzerland.

THE READERS' CORNER.

Carbolineum.

You may tell the man that asked about Carbolineum in the issue of May 9 that I used several gallons of the stuff on all the pine boards that came in contact with the ground around the entire greenhouse. I also used it on one of my hotbed boxes to find out if it would kill any plants, and I used it on the inside of the sideboards of a carnation bench.

Results: It neither killed nor injured carnations, tomatoes, cabbage, asters, lettuce, or anything planted near the boards. The boards of the box painted with Carbolineum are as good as new at the end of two years in the ground, while another box made at the same time is half rotten. I put on two coats of the Carbolineum. It is a perfect walnut stain in color and has a strong odor of tar, but is cheap and not injurious.

A. WOERNER.

For the information of J. N. H., and other of your readers who may be interested in the subject, I will say that there is a wood preservative known as Carbolineum, and that it is extensively used, some of the railroad companies treating their ties with it. There is little doubt but that it is an excellent preservative for wood that is subjected to moisture. But the material itself, and the fumes from it, are very destructive to plant life. I had some plant boxes made and treated with it, and knowing the danger from it, left them in the open, exposed to sun, wind and rain for two years. They were then planted with strawberry plants for forcing, and some of the leaves were affected by the fumes generated by strong sunshine. If the treated wood is given a coating of paint a few weeks after the Carbolineum has been applied, and has been exposed to the elements, no harm will come from its use.

I. L. POWELL.

Vines for a Hillside.

In the REVIEW of May 16 I note an inquiry, headed "Vines for a Hillside," signed W. C. K. If he wants something hardy, rapid-growing, with handsome, glossy green foliage throughout the season, can he find anything better than the Memorial rose, Rosa Wichuraiana? It is sure to grow downward, for I have tried unsuccessfully to train it up on a porch. It will grow fifteen feet in one season, if strong plants are set. It has a beautiful bloom; with a spicy odor in early summer, on last year's growth, and showy red berries in the fall. I doubt whether there is anything to beat it for W. C. K.'s purpose.

JOHN KRAHENBUHL.

Thrips.

What can we ever do to be able to destroy this little mite? I have fought it diligently for years. I have tried all the so-called cures, and given them thorough trials, too, but to no avail. For instance, we sprayed nicotine two to three times a week ever since our roses were planted last summer, and for the last month every day, and frequently twice a day, using the solution twice as strong as recommended, but fail in warm weather to even check them. We have just completed a test with the hydrocyanic gas, and must confess this also failed to kill thrips in rosebuds. This was also used double strength in the last test.

And now what can we do? Red pepper and tobacco smoke were tried and tried again on this place long ago, with no success. We have a fine stock of

MECHANICAL WATERING.

Growers are so accustomed to the use of the hose that it is difficult for them to believe that there is any method of saving labor in this direction which will produce equally good results. But there is a widespread interest in the several forms of mechanical watering now in use, or under trial, by progressive growers. Louis Wittbold, who is the patentee of one of these systems of labor saving watering, says he is in receipt of numerous letters, coming even from a half dozen countries of Europe, regarding his system, and that nearly every inquiry eventually leads to a small order for the nozzles, which are a special feature of the system. Possibly the extent of the interest is best shown by the statement that in April he sold over $250 worth of nozzles. As the nozzles are only a few cents apiece, it shows how many orders there must have been.

Last year the South Bend Floral Co., at South Bend, Ind., installed the Wittbold system, both in the greenhouses and in the open field for the irrigation of its stock growing outdoors. The accompanying illustration is possibly the best one ever produced showing the apparatus working. It is difficult to make a photograph which shows the spray, as the nozzles break the water up into such fine particles that the camera does not catch them except when the light is at a peculiar angle. Mr. Gingrich, the manager of the South Bend Floral Co., is well pleased with the way the system works, and Mr. Wittbold says that in nearly every case where he receives a trial order it results in a larger one as soon as the trial line has been in operation for a few weeks. The system is of particular interest to growers of considerable acreage of outdoor stock, for the reason that labor this season is so scarce and high in price that anything which minimizes the labor required possesses special attractions.

AN involuntary petition in bankruptcy has been filed against the Cleveland Window Glass Co., Cleveland, O., and W. H. Marlett appointed receiver.

The executive committee of the American Rose Society will hold an executive session at the Hotel Martinique, New York, the latter part of May, and among other things will take the first steps toward preparations for next year's show at Chicago. Several life members added to the society this spring has increased the permanent fund of the society.

LET'S HEAR YOUR VIEW.

About Taxes on Greenhouses.

The REVIEW frequently is in receipt of letters of which the following are samples:

What is the law about taxing the stock in greenhouses? Our assessors want to put a high value on my pot plants and also on the plants in the benches. What is the practice in other places?

And then there is perhaps the less difficult problem of assessments on the greenhouses themselves, as shown in the following:

As I know the Review is always ready to help to adjust any grievance that the smaller growers may have, I should like you to answer this question: Are greenhouses assessable? If so, to what amount can they be assessed?

I have five and one-half acres of land, horse, stable and about 27,000 square feet of glass, on which the assessor here has assessed me $17,000. This is more than the full valuation of the glass at the present time or any other time, for that matter. I have appealed to the county commissioners and, while I expect a reduction, I hardly expect my assessment to come down to a figure I call fair. Some growers I have written to are not assessed at all; others but very little. One grower states his honest belief is that greenhouses are not assessable and that he is willing to go into a combination of growers and fight the matter through to the supreme court. I should like to have the Review's opinion on this matter.

The inequality of taxation is one of the great evils in this country, and there probably is no trade in which taxes vary more widely than in the greenhouse business. But it is an interesting subject and one meriting full and free discussion. Write to the REVIEW, telling how you are taxed on greenhouses, on pot plants, on benched stock, and on plants in the field. Best of all, if you have succeeded in getting your taxes reduced, give the points that won the reduction for you. What do you consider a fair basis for taxation?

The REVIEW will take pleasure in printing your report.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

There is an old saying that "what is one man's meat is another man's poison," and so far as the market conditions are concerned the ill wind which has blown upon the producers of outdoor flowers has certainly wafted profit to the growers of indoor stock. The market has been active and prices, except for a few days last week, averaging above those ordinarily prevailing at this season, for the indoor stock is practically all that is available. The wholesalers are almost unanimous in reporting business much the best ever experienced for the first three weeks of May. They all say shipping demand is excellent, but the reports as to local business vary widely.

There has been a marked deterioration in the quality of roses within the last week. There is hardly any good stock. Most of the roses show the marks of thrips and the growers, one and all, say they never have had such a battle to clear their houses. Most of them say the pest came from the outside, borne on the crest of the warm south wind which accompanied last week's couple of days of summer. The rose crops also are on the down grade and there are those who say the cuts will be much lighter by Decoration day.

There continue to be abundant supplies of carnations. Indeed, white stock is so plentiful that some exceedingly cheap sales are reported, compared with recent values.

The receipts of peonies are all that the market requires and considerably more, the surplus going into cold storage to await the certain demand at Decoration day. As a result, the price of peonies is held firmly. The prospect for peonies for Decoration day is in doubt. The frosts have done much injury. Indeed, it is reported that at Fairbury, Ill., where Kring Bros. have quite a field of peonies, it was as cold as 22 degrees one night last week. From Sarcoxie comes word of freezing weather since the cutting of the mid-season varieties began. Locally there was a sharp frost May 19 and 20. E. E. Pieser, of Kennicott Bros. Co., estimates the peony supply at forty per cent what it was for last Decoration day, but a week of warm weather would necessitate his revising his estimate. Peonies now are reaching this market from greater distances than usual, considerable quantities coming from Tennessee.

There are more lilies than the market has required. Cape jasmine is obtainable, but not in special demand. Sweet peas continue in large supply and are possibly the best selling item on the list. E. C. Amling says the buyers line up at the sweet pea counter every morning, to the neglect of other stock. But the ordinary grades of Blanche Ferry and Earliest of All are a glut, just the same. Pansies sell well. Some fine outdoor valley is arriving and brings double last year's prices. A few violets still are received. There are abundant supplies of all the odds and ends of stock, including gladioli, poet's narcissi, Parrott tulips, irises, stocks, antirrhinums, etc.

There is a demand for green goods, especially common ferns, which seem to be short all over the country. In one wholesale house Monday two cases were noted Diverging Views.

One of the results of our intermittent summer has been that there is more variation in prices and market opinion than is ordinarily the case. Take, for example, Easter lilies: Some houses are holding them at $2 a dozen, while others are glad to sell at $8 per hundred. Take the case of smilax: Quotations range from $15 per hundred to $25 per hundred. These are exceptional items, but there is much variation in the prices asked all through the list, showing widely divergent views of market conditions.

Various Notes.

Mrs. S. M. Pritchard died May 15 at the home of her daughter, Mrs. C. M. Dickinson, at Park Ridge. Interment was at Park Ridge May 17.

Thomas Minon, father of Steve Minon, well known in the market through his many years' service with Kennicott Bros. Co., was struck by an automobile at Douglas boulevard and Central Park avenue May 17 and died Sunday night without having recovered consciousness.

C. W. McKeller has put in a new display case especially for orchids. It is plate glass on the front and sides, with mirrored back, and it shows off the orchid exhibit in first-class style. It already has increased the business in this department.

E. C. Amling has placed an order for a thirty-five horse-power Silent Knight automobile, said to be more nearly noiseless than any other machine in the market.

O. Johnson has secured space with the Chicago Rose Co. and started Monday selling stock on commission for two or three of the growers who have consigned to him during his previous business connections.

Peter Reinberg has planted five houses of the Mrs. Marshall Field rose, between 25,000 and 30,000 plants. This year they had only 7,000 plants, but found the variety the most profitable of any they grew.

P. J. Hauswirth will be in his new store on Michigan avenue next week.

George Weiland says business is not brisk in Evanston just now.

C. M. Dickinson, at Hunt's, calls attention to the fact that in his advertising of To-bak-ine he warned the growers as long ago as the Easter number of the REVIEW that an unusually severe attack of insect pests was to be expected this spring.

On Sunday, May 19, the florists' baseball team went to Morton Grove for a game with the team bearing the name of Pohlmann Bros. It is said to have been a gay and disputatious occasion. No two witnesses agree as to the score, but it was not in favor of the city team.

The Adam Schillo Lumber Co. has bought the property it occupies at the northwest corner of Blackhawk street and Hawthorne avenue and at the southwest corner of Hawthorne avenue and Weed street for $117,000. The property has an east frontage of 624 feet, with a depth of 220 feet through to the north branch of the Chicago river.

Pohlmann Bros. Co. has a growing appreciation of the Killarney rose. John Pohlmann says that one house has given them about 100 long-stemmed blooms a day in the last few weeks, together with the usual proportion of shorter stock, and that the select flowers have sold for 15 cents each without trouble when there have been times that the surplus of long Beauties were worth no more than that.

Joseph Marks, of the A. L. Randall Co., leaves this week to make the first Pacific coast trip for the firm. He goes first to the Pacific northwest. Farney, the firm's other traveler, is now in Oklahoma.

A Joliet paper says that J. D. Thompson has leased one-half of the Elmer E. Henry story at 110 North Chicago street, where he will open a flower store. The paper adds that "everything will be popularly priced, so that anybody can avail themselves of the most beautiful flowers for any occasion. A fine, big refrigerator has been ordered, and the store will be in the most elegant shape for handling this class of business." Only a few weeks ago it was advertised in Joliet that Mr. Thompson had taken the flower department of the Spot Cash store.

ings of Joe Hill and Kate Moulton roses for next season, N. J. Wietor reporting that this year regular orders have taken all they cut of these varieties at first-class prices.

Adolph Anthes, at Milwaukee avenue and Addison street, has not enjoyed good health this season and the doctors tell him that to get rid of his kidney troubles he must give up business, at least for a time. He has three greenhouses, built two years ago, and everything in good shape, but will sell out and retire for a time.

Wm. Arnold, foreman for George Reinberg, was on the market Monday. He said all the rose growers north of town have been busy fighting thrips and that they all want rain for the carnations in the fields.

L. Coatsworth is at the Benthay-Coatsworth establishment at New Castle this week.

John J. Kruchten is getting ready to store a big lot of peonies. Last year he held them into the middle of the summer.

John Zech, of Zech & Mann, says all stock is moving well except white carnations.

H. Payne, at Hinsdale, has, as a side crop, a lot of vegetable plants grown for the Fair.

The E. F. Winterson Co. says that Saturday, May 18, was the heaviest day's business since the seed and plant department was opened. John Degnan says he looks for the demand to keep up well into June, because of the lateness of the season.

Andrew McAdams has one bench of cattleyas on his place on Fifty-third street which he says has paid him better than any other bench in the establishment for the last two years.

Bassett & Washburn say they look for a decided decrease in the now heavy rose cuts after Decoration day.

Weiland & Risch always can say a word for Killarney. John P. Risch points out that it is less affected by thrips than is any other variety.

The George Wittbold Co. says that the overdue spring has operated greatly to their advantage. They have been busy for weeks with outdoor work and think that the activity in this department will continue until warm weather comes. The season always winds up with a brief rush in the first days of actual summer.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Trade conditions have not changed much in the last week, except that stock of all kinds is getting more plentiful every day. The weather continues cold, and plantmen are complaining about business dragging. The only people who are really happy are the fakers; they can get everything they want at their own prices. Violets have disappeared entirely.

Various Notes.

Mr. Ernest Zieger and his brother, Herman, will sail June 27 on the steamship Deutschland for Hamburg, Germany, where they go to visit their father and other relatives.

Charles Crall has the sympathy of his host of friends in the trade in the loss of his mother. Hoo-Hoo.

TELEGRAPH RATES.

After the adjournment of congress, when it was too late for immediate action to be taken, the telegraph companies raised their rates in most instances from twenty to twenty-five per cent. Their action was concurrent, indicating a complete understanding between them.

The standard rate is that from Chicago to New York. It was increased April 1 on day business precisely twenty-five per cent. The day rate was formerly 40 cents for ten words; it is now 50 cents. The night rate, which was 30 cents, is now 40 cents.

A corresponding increase was made in the rates to Washington and Philadelphia and most eastern cities, exclusive of Boston and other New England points. There the old rate, which was 50 cents for ten words, is unaltered. The rates were also increased to most southern points, the advance in some instances being thirty-three and one-third per cent. Between Chicago and Milwaukee there was no increase, but the rates from Chicago to Cincinnati, St. Louis, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Omaha and other such points were largely increased—in many instances thirty-three and one-third per cent or more. No change was made in Pacific coast rates, which were already excessively high.

BOSTON.

The Market.

The week has proved to be one of extreme dullness, not relieved by a single break. Far too much material has been arriving and low prices have ruled in some lines to allow of a clearance being made. A slightly improved tone is now noticeable, due in large part to the close approach of Memorial day, which calls for an ever-increasing amount of stock. Roses, with the warmer weather, now show signs of deterioration. Carnations, however, are of good quality. Double violets have just made their exit. Sweet peas are abundant and of good quality. Bulbous stock is plentiful, from outdoors, and sells rather slowly. Gladioli, both the large hybrids and the various forms of Colvillei and nanus, are good, as are Spanish iris.

Stocks are plentiful but sell poorly. An avalanche will be forthcoming for Memorial day, and there promises to be plenty of marguerites, snapdragon, candytuft and other material. Green stock remains about the same.

Many growers are now busy with bedding plants, trade in which, owing to the cold weather, is later than usual in commencing. Among the flowering plants, good rhododendrons, Lilium elegans and tigrinum and plenty of hydrangeas are seen.

The weather continues unusually cold, with frosts and some local damage May 21 and 22.

Club Meeting.

The month of May is a specially busy one for gardeners and florists, but the attendance May 21 proved the largest the club has ever had in May. There were 120 present. The subject of bedding plants was handled by three speakers. W. N. Craig treated bulbs, confining his remarks chiefly to tulips, daffodils and hyacinths, and enumerating the best varieties of each and the best ways to plant them effectively. President Westwood, who is noted for his bedding at Forest Hill cemetery, gave an interesting paper on tender bedding plants, while Frederic J. Rea, of the Norwood Nurseries, treated of herbaceous plants and the best to use for bedding purposes. The evening was altogether too short to allow of a thorough discussion of all the papers, which were limited to ten minutes each, but many members discussed them and some interesting points were brought out. Among those who spoke were J. W. Duncan, Kenneth Finlayson, F. E. Palmer, Wm. Elliott, James Morton, Duncan Finlayson, and James Wheeler.

It was voted to have a mid-summer picnic and an invitation was read, from W. W. Rawson, inviting the club to visit his Marblehead dahlia farm in September. Several queries from the question box were disposed of and a number of new members admitted.

Seasonable exhibits were numerous and included Carnation Alma Ward, from Peter Fisher, Ellis, Mass.; Trollius Japonica Excelsior, from Julius Heurlein, South Braintree, Mass., which received a report of merit; Daphne cneorum, from T. H. Westwood; Gladiolus Peach Blossom, from R. & J. Farquhar & Co.; White Killarney rose, from Waban Conservatories; Salvia argentea, from H. A. Stevens Co.; Palmetto asparagus, from Wilfrid Wheeler.

Refreshments were served and it was, as usual, quite late before the meeting adjourned. No meetings will be held after June 18 until September 18.

Various Notes.

Although there were no prizes offered, a splendid lot of seasonable flowers were on exhibition at Horticultural hall on May 18, and it was decided to keep the show open on the following day. M. Sullivan, gardener to W. Whitman, had a fine table of pelargoniums, also a large collection of named tulips, Cattleya Mossiae and carnations, which were awarded gratuities. R. & J. Farquhar & Co. had a grand collection of early bedding tulips in eighty-one varieties, which received a certificate of merit, also a table of herbaceous plants. Julius Heurlin, of the Blue Hill Nurseries, had fifty-two varieties of herbaceous plants, including several new and unique varieties. Harvard Botanic Gardens, Robert Cameron, gardener, also had a large and representative collection. Mrs. E. M. Gill had a nice general display. May 25 a display of late tulips will be held and the rhododendron show comes two weeks later, June 8.

There is a beautiful display of pyrus and malus at the Arnold Arboretum this week, which attract many visitors. The lilacs promise a grand show in a few days, the earlier sorts being already opening.

Everyone is anticipating the biggest Memorial day trade on record and only good weather is needed to assure it. Advance orders break all records.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The feature of the market (it is nice to talk about the pleasant things first) is the arrival of peonies. They have come in all colors, from the south, and are a welcome addition to the decorative flowers.

Flowers generally have reached that point where astute buyers feel that it is policy to raise rather than depreciate values for stock of quality. In other words, if prices go lower the growers can hardly be expected to take care of their plants. While there are some bright spots in the market, the general report shows a heavier load, with less strength to bear it, than at any time during the present season. Sacrifice sales in quantity are reported at prices to bring tears to the eyes of the most callous, while there was much stock that was unsold. Conditions improved on Saturday, locally, under the influence of the Jewish Whitsuntide.

While the market is heavy this week, there are strong signs of an improvement. The immense Beauty crop of last week is going off, while the demand created by such extraordinarily low prices for good flowers is extending to other varieties. Short roses are hard to sell. Carnations were very bad stock indeed last week. Indications point to a good, but not an excessive supply for next week. It is probable that some locally grown peonies will be in the market by the time these lines are read.

The Decorated Cars.

The feature of the automobile carnival held at Belmont park last Saturday was the contest for the silver cup offered by Motor Print, an automobile newspaper, for the best decorated car. There were a number of contestants, and some work for the florists and for the amateur decorator. First prize was captured by a car belonging to Francis I. Gowen, of Chestnut Hill, that was elaborately decorated with calla lilies and dogwood blossoms, pink ribbon being freely used. Among the other cars was one that was ornamented with white doves in addition to the floral decorations. Live white doves were also released by the occupants of this car as they passed the judges' stand. Another car was garlanded entirely with American Beauty roses, while still another had daisies, white and yellow, of immense size, something like twelve inches in diameter, for its floral feature. It is needless to add that these flowers were not the genuine thing, as were the others. This idea of decorating motor cars is a new one here, and

THE PLANT AUCTION.

It is a learned crowd that attends the Vesey street auctions of nursery stock, looking for bargains in trees and plants and bulbs for the lawn or garden, says an interesting writer in a New York daily. And the woman who strays in once in a great while at sight of the red flag, to get a rose bush for the corner of the garden, has to keep a finger on the place in the catalogue and pay strict attention, or be lost in a maze of Latin.

For the amateur hears of the garden auction only by chance, and few get to it. The buyers, as a rule, are nurserymen and gardeners with shoulders stooped by many seasons of spade wielding. They are classical scholars, too, so far as the field of botany extends, and not only talk, but think, in Latin on auction days, which come twice a week. There can be no sham at these sales. Squinting of the eyes, and shifting of position, followed by knowing remarks about atmosphere and color effects, such as are

Even the "bluff" that may go a little way at the sale of Oriental ceramics made in New Jersey is useless in Vesey street.

There is not much color there, except of the brown of the earth which surrounds the roots, and the dull greens and grays of the cut-back plant stems and sapling trunks that must be bought on faith.

It takes an expert to tell just what sort of a plant is bound up in the unpromising looking bulb, and the novice isn't helped any when the auctioneer calls out "Caladium esculentum—what am I offered?"

At the same time his assistant juggles the bulbs, throwing them with one hand, catching them in the other, and keeping two or three in the air all the time, just to attract attention while the bidding is in progress.

"What is Caladium esculentum?" asks the layman timidly of the man next to him who has just bought a hundred.

"Elephants' ears, of course," says the purchaser, without turning his eyes from the auctioneer, who is already beginning to talk glibly about Ipomoea pandurata, which he declares is perfectly hardy and will thrive in any soil, producing luxuriant and compact foliage and quantities of beautiful white flowers with purple throats.

That's fine, but the layman who couldn't even read that all Gaul is divided into three parts, in the original, is uneasy because he doesn't know what Ipomoea pandurata means, and hates to ask. There is nothing on the list of stock, of course, to tell him that it is simply the day-blooming moonflower.

However, there are side remarks from time to time by the auctioneer.

"I like to sell the bulbs," he said today, "because there is never any excitement then. There is something soothing about a bulb; it suggests a long rest, so different from your excitement and frenzied bidding when, for instance, I put up the Stephanandra flexuosa."

Perhaps that was merely the auctioneer's way of chiding his listeners for not being lively enough. And, a little later in the sale, when he couldn't get even a five-cent bid to start a solitary box tree, he gave it away without any warning to a man standing in the back of the room.

COLORING HYDRANGEAS.

What is the preparation used in coloring hydrangeas blue? W. E. L.

In some soils the pink Hydrangea hortensis has a tendency to turn blue. This is usually thought to be due to the presence of iron in the soil. Alum is also claimed by some to produce blue flowers. Our own experiments in these lines have not been productive of very satisfactory results. Our blue plants remain of that color, and so with the pink ones. There seems to be no definite information about this coloring process. About all that has been written in regard to it is largely theoretical, but in most cases the use of iron filings in the soil is said to have a tendency to create blue flowers, while, on the other hand, it is averred that neglect to use iron in the soil makes the blues revert to pink. We would recommend trying some iron filings, but do not feel disappointed if results are not as you expect. C. W.

"James W. NEW YORK.The Market.

Sunday, May 19, was the first perfect summer day of 1907. Life was worth living, after all the months of chill and disappointing delays. Coney Island opened with an attendance of nearly 200,000, and every one was greeted with a lesson in floricultural display in the big ocean parks there that could not fail to impress favorably and helpfully those who see but little of nature during the week and make this their only outing day. Monday night the temperature had again fallen, so that overcoats were again in evidence. Straw hats looked sadly out of place, and it took a natural born optimist to realize that summer had actually arrived. We have concluded to do no more boasting as to warm weather till the dog days come.

One result of last week's erratic weather is seen in mildewed roses. They began to arrive May 18. But a comparison with last year's business at this date leaves no cause for complaint or pessimism. The whole season, in fact, since Easter has been well in advance of 1906, both as to quality and prices. Both have held wonderfully, and in these respects we have had much to be thankful for. If summer prices come now, we have no cause for wonder or discouragement.

Violets, even, have felt the effect of the prolonged spring, and the cool weather has maintained their quality, so that those still arriving are rapidly absorbed at good prices. Few in the wholesale section can remember shipments extending so far into the summer.

The balance of May will show a considerable depression from the prices of last week and already one may safely assert that summer prices prevail.

Beauties, the best of them, were down to 12 cents May 20, and in large quan-boxes are taken a uniform rate of $2 per hundred is accepted.

Carnations, too, have joined the procession and are selling at from 50 cents up to $3 per hundred, the higher price only for the novelties.

Orchids are abundant and slightly below the average of the last few weeks. Of all else, lilies, valley, sweet peas, etc., there is enough and to spare. Everybody is well supplied with lilac. Wagonloads reach the market daily from the nurserymen in this vicinity, and thousands of bunches are gathered in the country over night and find their way in, with no questions asked, and no sure method of determining their source.

Various Notes.

Frosts have done much damage to the market gardeners. There will have to be an enormous amount of replanting. The busy season with the seedsmen shows but little sign of diminution. Night and day the work goes on. To the nurserymen the season has been one of unadulterated good fortune. Even yet, the shipments of trees, vines and shrubs continue and with perfect safety and assurance of a satisfied patronage.

The Newport branch stores will open about June 1. Siebrecht & Son, Leikens, Wadley & Smythe are making for the usual society events, which promise to be as numerous as ever.

The exodus to Europe continues. The gayety of those who remain is confined largely to the country houses. In the city the principal decorations have been those of the Canadian Club banquet, and at the many dinners and receptions tendered the old Japanese veteran, Kuroki, whose popularity seems to grow with every day he remains. Quite a number of weddings take place this week, notwithstanding the superstitious avoidance of May for that important purpose. On Monday, Myer has the decoration, at St. Leo's church, for Mrs. Ada Jaffray McKicker and Herman P. Sappe, one of the events of the year. A number of elaborate affairs are featured in the leading dailies, for this week and next, that will call for the best efforts of several of the leading florists of the city.

An interesting event on Sunday was the placing of a wreath of roses and valley by General Kuroki, on the tomb of General Grant. At one of the luncheons given Kuroki, at the Hotel Astor, the table, 12x60 feet, was decorated with American Beauties and smilax laid in quaint Japanese figures and in the form of an ellipse. At one end of the room a low stage was arranged to represent a Japanese garden.

Reed & Keller's latest novelty since their introduction of bamboo screens, etc., is their new letter for florists, in different styles and sizes, in which they are having already an enormous sale.

August Loeber, of Arthur T. Boddington's force of salesmen, is still ill at the Boston hospital, but is convalescing. H. A. Bunyard has just returned from a week's care of the invalid. It will be many weeks before Mr. Loeber can hope to resume his duties on the road. Mr. Boddington has just received a large shipment of Cattleya labiata.

The popular Detroit park commissioner, Philip Breitmeyer, was in the city Saturday and Sunday, looking over the parks of New York and Brooklyn and under the protective guidance of Harry Bunyard.

The error in my last letter, making life membership in the New York Florists' Club worth $1,000 instead of $100, may have been prophetic, for when we have our own home for the club and its rapidly increasing size is considered, $1,000 will seem none too large a sum for the honor of perpetuity in this "hall of fame."

LORRAINE BEGONIAS.

I have been looking over some old REVIEWS to find something on Lorraine begonias, but was unable to find anything. I have some started in 2¼-inch pots. They need transplanting and I don't know anything about the soil and treatment of them, so please give me some advice.
C. F. R.

A good soil to shift your Lorraine begonias into consists of one-third fibrous loam, leaf-mold and well decayed and dried cow manure, to which may be added a little powdered charcoal and some sharp sand. The plants should be potted rather loosely. They do not require a house which is heavily shaded, doing much better in one where the sun's rays are merely broken. The growth made is rather slow during the hot months, but after August 1 they move along more rapidly. A temperature of 60 degrees at night will suit them well. Admit air quite freely. When flowers start to open, a cooler house is to be preferred. They will grow well in a frame after the middle of June, using lath blinds to shade them during the heat of the day.

BENCH BUILDING.

How shall I construct benches for roses, carnations and mums? Am particularly anxious to know how to arrange for drainage.
E. D. P.

There are several types of benches now in common use. In many large houses, concrete and tiles are used exclusively. Another style in more common use is that in which adjustable gas pipe legs support angle-iron frames on which cypress bottoms are placed. The third, and perhaps most common, type is made entirely of wood. The latter material will not last like iron, but if the legs of the benches are bedded in cement or well coated with coal tar and the portion above ground is given a coat of paint they will last a good many years, provided cypress or hemlock is used. At the present time pecky cypress is very popular and, while inexpensive, it is said to outwear pine or hemlock. In the case of side benches they should not be fastened directly to the framework of the house unless iron brackets to separate the woodwork is used.

Roses, chrysanthemums and carnations do not need more than from four to five inches of compost to grow in, so if your side boards are six inches high they will be all right. Drainage is secured by leaving a space between each of the bottom boards; half an inch will suffice. Some growers use plank bottoms, which come higher than boards. As a rule we find that $\frac{3}{8}$ -inch cypress wears from four to six years in the bottoms. The sides, if painted, will last longer. After making the benches, give the insides of them a coating of crude petroleum. It acts as a preservative and is repugnant to insects. Side benches may be from two and one-half to three and one-fourth feet wide, center benches four and one-half to five feet. Nothing is gained by having them wider, as the middles of the wider benches do not dry out well in winter and are difficult to clean and care for.

In filling the benches put some of the coarser compost at the bottom. We usually lay some coarse straw or meadow hay in before hauling in the loam. From twenty-seven to thirty inches is a suitable height for benches, although they are found both higher and lower. C. W.

NAMING OF FLORISTS' VARIETIES.

Even in the naming of florists' varieties some fancy used to be exercised in the seventeenth century, particularly in the case of carnations, says the London Times. There were red Hulos and Crystallines and Striped Savages and Canbersines and Lusty Gallants and Pale Pageants and Infantas and Feathered Tawnies. And there is no reason why florists now should not show a little more spirit and invention in giving names to their novelties. Florists' varieties do not have botanical names; therefore the florist has a free choice and no excuse if his names are meaningless or ugly. Yet they are usually both. What is to be said for the name Blairii No. 2, given to an excellent old rose, or Gruss an Teplitz, given to an excellent new one? The habit of calling flowers after people is a dull one and ought to be discouraged. All that can be said for it is that the names of people do not need to be translated; but this would apply also to classical names, which are far less used, scarcely at all; but even if a pretty florist's name had to be translated it would not matter much, provided it was short and descriptive. Daffodils in this respect are better treated than roses; for instance, Lucifer is a good name for the glowing flower to which it is given, and Sunset is another. But there are some pretty names even among roses, as, for instance, Irish Glory and Irish Modesty for the beautiful single teas which have lately come from Ireland. Even humorous names are better than dull ones, and the gardener is to be commended who christened a new cucumber Tender and True, when he might have called it Lord Kitchener or Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman.

CAMBRIDGE, Washington Co., NEW YORKSeed Trade News.*AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., Henry W. Wood, Richmond, Va.; First Vice-Pres., Charles Burge, Toledo, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 25th annual meeting will be held at New York City, June, 1907

J. M. CLARK, secretary of the Leonard Seed Co., Chicago, has been ill with the grip.

THE southern truckers, those who have escaped frosts, are realizing record prices for their crops.

AN interesting note on experiments in bulb growing at Spokane, Wash., will be found on page 46 of this issue.

THE REVIEW invites free discussion in this department of any subject of interest to seedsmen. You will be speaking to the whole trade.

It is now a question of date and not weather with the counter trade customer. Time is up and seed must be planted. There is consequent activity reported in this branch of trade from all sections.

NEW YORK stores report continued good counter trade, at least on all warm days, and a considerable call for market gardeners' specialties for replanting purposes, much loss having been occasioned by late frosts.

THE Evans Seed Co., West Branch, Mich., J. R. Scott, manager, advertised in the local papers May 10, offering to place growing contracts with the farmers, adding that they are in the market to buy or sell any kind of seeds.

THE Ogemaw Grain and Seed Co. advertises in the local paper at West Branch, Mich., as follows: "We will make contracts for 1,000 acres in white field peas, either at a fixed price or at market price at time of delivery. We are also prepared to contract for any quantity of field beans on the same terms."

MARSHALL H. DURYEA, chairman of the approaching twenty-fifth annual convention of the American Seed Trade Association, to be held at New York, June 25 to 27, is sending out a tariff sheet and illustrated folder of the Hotel Astor, where the headquarters will be made. It is thought the selection of this famous hostelry will do much to add to the pleasure of the meeting. The rate is from $2.50 per day upward.

THE onion set stand in the vicinity of Chicago is as good as could be expected. The growth of the crop generally is two weeks behind what it was last year at this date. On the earlier planted fields the cultivators are being run strongly at present and hand weeding will be necessary by June 1. The acreage is about the same as last year—less rather than more—and the outlook is satisfactory to most of the growers. The late seeding is coming along rapidly and bids fair to meet up with the early seeding before harvest time.

JAMES VICK'S SONS,

SEEDSMEN.

Rochester, New York.

May 20th, 1907.

THE FLORISTS' REVIEW,
Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:—

Please stop our regular adv. running at present and give us just enough of your valuable space to keep our name before the trade. We are drawing to the close of the most successful season in the Florists' Department we have had in years, and at the present time, while we have a reasonable quantity of about everything that Florists use, we have no surpluses to advertise. With the present to encourage us we are "laying pipe" for future business on a bigger scale than ever before.

Yours very truly,

JAMES VICK'S SONS.

W. H. D.—K.

CHICAGO.—The onion set field that looked so good to the out of town crop inspector was a good stand of chives.

THE reports from the pea and bean districts of Wisconsin and Michigan are not encouraging. The season is weeks late and the chances of a full crop from the acreage planted thereby greatly reduced.

THE Barteldes Seed Co., Denver, Colo., reports the recent shipment of 6,600 pounds of grass seeds to Buenos Ayres, Argentina. The shipment went via New York.

C. C. MORSE & Co., San Francisco, who recently took over the business of the Cox Seed Co., have removed their headquarters to the Market street store of the Cox Co.

THE Leonard Seed Co., Chicago, reports its Jefferson Park branch a great success. The market gardeners are pleased with the convenience of having a full stocked seed store in their midst.

COUNTER trade has hardly come up to expectations this season; especially not up to anticipations aroused by the heavy volume of business done in March. While March was far ahead of usual records, April fell very short and May is doing nothing to put the score back in our favor. The weather is at the bottom of it all. June may be good for better than the usual business, which usually amounts to little but the sale of insecticides after Memorial day, but it hardly will pull the season up to what was expected of the counter trade end of the business.

THE Mangelsdorf Co., Atchison, Kan., May 10 received two carloads of alfalfa seeds from Germany.

THERE has been urgent call for seed of the early varieties of tomatoes from the canning districts, where quantities of plants have been caught by frosts.

THE Alfred J. Brown Seed Co., of Grand Rapids, Mich., which does an enormous business in vegetable plants, reports the Grand Rapids market practically sold out of tomato plants.

THE WHOLESALERS' SITUATION.

A well known wholesale seedsman in the east writes as follows under date of May 21:

"Right in the face of all sorts of tales of present woes, and prognostications of future short crops of garden seeds, wholesale prices continue most ridiculously low, as general reports, from every direction, and unpropitious weather, must have some foundation in fact. While 'bad news travels fast' and reports of crop failures usually are exaggerated, still 'where there is so much smoke there must be some fire.' The Californians growing onion seed, lettuce seed and sweet peas, who report only half a crop of everything; the cabbage seed growers of Washington and Oregon, who report only half a crop; the pea and bean growers of Michigan and Wisconsin; the cabbage seed growers of Long Island, and the beet, carrot, radish and other seed growers of Europe—all of these warn us of a reduced harvest, and that certainly means higher prices for what is saved.

"But the merry dance, figuratively speaking, of commercially cutting each other's throats, still goes on. Some firms are ready to sell at any price, so they do business, and this being so, it is impossible for others, who are better aware of crop conditions and probabilities, to get prices to comport with the expectations of the harvest. Those who know are already disposed to look upon the coming pea and bean harvest as already in considerable jeopardy, for the pea planting is delayed four weeks, and that can only result in undeveloped vines by the time the burning hot weather strikes the crop, the result being short pods and few of them; while with beans the delay, which will necessarily follow the unpropitious weather, for the bean crop will have to take its turn after many other farm operations are performed, all of which are late, will result in a late growth of bean vines, bringing them very near to the danger line of frost, if not within the grasp of its destructive influences.

"All things taken together indicate that next winter there will be a clearing out of everything in the way of garden seeds, such as has not been on record for a lifetime."

EUROPEAN SEED NOTES.

The wholesale seed trade is drawing to an end for this season, practically all lines of vegetable and flower seeds clearing well at good prices. Of many crops it was generally supposed some uncomfortable shortage would be felt, but so far I cannot hear of any inconveniences having been suffered through lack of supplies. Certainly prices, except for a few lines like garden peas, clover, etc., were on the upward tendency and in some cases reached what might be termed a high level, but not high enough to affect the retailer, whose margin of profit is great enough not to be affected by any petty market fluctuations.

The fact is, it is now becoming a difficult matter for there to be a whole world shortage of seeds of any one variety. The time has passed when one country had the monopoly of any sort of seed. Take cauliflower, for instance, where a great shortage and high prices were expected. At one time Italy grew the bulk of the cauliflower. Now we get them in even increasing quantities from that country, for a much greater acreage is grown than when they had the monopoly of the trade; but we also get large quantities from Denmark, Holland, France, Germany, and here in England quantities are grown in Lincolnshire and Essex. Of peas we probably now get fifty per cent from Canada and in favorable seasons large quantities of home-grown peas are on the market. Germany and France also grow considerable quantities, and the latest source of supply is Australia and New Zealand. And so it is with a host of other seed lines.

This charming addition to our greenhouse Primroses originated at the Royal Gardens, Kew, as an accidental cross between the small, but bright-flowered Himalayan species, P. FLORIBUNDA, and the sweet-scented P. VERTICILLATA, a native of Arabia. The plant is a strong grower, with bright green leaves, and numerous erect flowerstems, 10 to 18 inches in height, producing flowers in whorls at intervals along their whole length. The flowers are fragrant, bright yellow in color, with a slender tube and spreading limb, nearly an inch in diameter. As a winter-flowering decorative plant it is an acquisition; its floriferousness when in a very small state is remarkable.

American readers know better than I can tell them what seeds are grown in America. With the great diversity of soils and climatic influences practically everything can be grown in one spot or another, and when one seed district of Europe or America is short-cropped, another is plentiful. In the case of those seeds which remain equal in vitality, and in some cases even improved by two or three years' warehousing, annually increasing quantities are being carried over by wholesalers, and even retailers, too, so that, taking all circumstances into consideration, absolute shortages are nowadays well nigh to being impossible.

In some districts, mostly the German and French cultivations, reports are to hand of severe winter, hard frost, with no protection of snow, having severely cut into the ranks of many vegetable seeds, especially the fleshy-leaved sorts, as brassicas, salads and the like. Of course, it is already reported that a shortage of seed will occur after the harvest of 1907. In Italy no great damage has been done, although the winter was of almost record severity. It was mostly heavy snowstorms, and snow, of course, protects rather than damages vegetation. Onions in all the onion districts, and especially Italy, are fair, and with good conditions following now a full average crop will result. B. J.

THE REAL TROUBLE.

"The real fact of the case in this onion seed trouble, which we always have of late years the moment a short crop sends up the prices," writes an American seedsman in a letter which is published by an English trade paper, "is that foolish and unreasonable competition has gradually educated the planter until he expects his onion seed at a price that, unless it be a year of a great crop, is much below the cost of production. It would seem to the writer that the conditions among our onion seed growers are fast becoming such that in future much higher rates must prevail; this, year after year, obtaining prices which are below the cost of production, surely must have an end."

Vegetable Forcing.

A CONSIDERABLE shortage in tomato plants has developed. The canners are in the market for large quantities of the favorite canning varieties and find it impossible to obtain the right varieties in any quantity.

BIG RANGE OF VEGETABLES.

W. S. Weiant, Newark, O., is putting up a range of fifteen houses, each 300 feet long, for vegetable growing. Last season Mr. Weiant put up three such houses. He has had excellent success, but found the range was erected on land too low for the purpose; consequently the three original houses are being removed to a location two blocks distant and higher. Adjoining these the fifteen new houses are going up. When completed it will be one of the largest ranges in the state devoted exclusively to vegetables. The transportation facilities are among the special features of the location. Interurban railroads give rapid transit to a number of cities where the market is good. Carl A. Weiant, the son, is the active manager of the plant.

VEGETABLE MARKETS.

CHICAGO, May 22.—Cucumbers, 40c to 75c doz.; head lettuce, 25c to 40c box; leaf lettuce, 20c to 30c case.

NEW YORK, May 20.—Mushrooms plenty, and selling slowly at comparatively low prices. Cucumbers in fair demand and steady. Very little other hot-house stock available. Cucumbers, 40c to 75c doz.; lettuce, 75c to $1 doz.; mushrooms, 20c to 50c lb.; radishes, $1 to $2 per hundred bunches.

BOSTON, May 20.—Warmer weather has increased supplies, but trade remains good. Cucumbers and lettuce sell specially well. Tomatoes, 20c lb.; cucumbers, $3 to $4.50 box; lettuce, 50c to $1.25 doz.; radishes, $1.75 to $2 box; mushrooms, $1.50 to $3 per 4-lb. basket; escarolle, 75c to $1 doz.; romaine, $1 to $1.25 doz.; beets, $1.50 to $2 doz. bunches; carrots, $1.75 doz. bunches; chicory, 75c to $1 doz.; parsley, $2 box.

TOMATOES.

Regulation of Moisture.

With the brighter days and more drying atmosphere, a much more plentiful supply of water will be needed to keep the plants in a healthy, growing condition. Not only is more moisture at the roots needed, but more atmospheric moisture is also necessary. The amount of atmospheric moisture must be judiciously regulated. In this the weather conditions must be taken into consideration. On bright, warm days it would be hard to overcharge the atmosphere, as it would be necessary to have a good deal of air on the houses to keep the temperature sufficiently low, but the moisture should be so applied that it will be pretty well dried out before the time the house has to be shut down, so as not to have too humid an atmosphere over night. On dull, cloudy days little sprinkling of the passageways or benches will be needed. On such days there is usually sufficient humidity in the air so that it is unnecessary to create any artificially in the house.

On the other hand, an atmosphere overcharged with moisture is productive of fungous diseases, which often prove quite troublesome to the grower of tomatoes indoors. A disease known as spot is the most prevalent, more so in the late spring and early summer months than through the winter. This is undoubtedly a fungus, which breaks out in yellow spots, usually on the older leaves, and if not checked will soon spread and destroy the whole leaf. The regulation of atmospheric moisture, as I have stated above, is one of the best preventive measures, and a dusting with lime and sulphur mixed in about equal proportions and applied when the foliage is dry is good for preventing the spread of the disease. We have tried Bordeaux mixture with fair success, but it leaves the plants unsightly and we have not found it any more efficacious in preventing the spread of the disease than the lime and sulphur.

BULB-GROWING AT SPOKANE.

Thirty thousand bulbs are in bloom on the government-built tract of land 25x142 feet at Hillyard Orchard Heights, four miles east of Spokane, Wash., where John Van der Boesch, who has made a life study of the culture of hyacinths, tulips and narcissi, and a small colony of Hollanders are making experiments with 40,000 bulbs. Mr. Van der Boesch has grown bulbs in France, England, on the Channel Isle and in Holland, but nowhere, he declares, has he found such a combination of climatic and soil conditions as is afforded in his present location.

The Hillyard tract is one of three temporary stations established by the government in conjunction with private growers in Washington. The other two are located in other parts of the state, and the one which meets with the best success will be made the permanent bulb farm. The results at Hillyard lead Mr. Van der Boesch to believe that the farm will be the one chosen.

However, there is more than soil and climate in these results, and a large share of the credit is due the patient and painstaking Dutch methods of the men in charge. The farm is owned by John Mass and worked by growers direct from the land of dikes, who bring the expert experience. The plot consists of less than an acre of ground, not all of which is in use. It is a piece of low-lying ground at the base of a hill and the soil is a loose, volcanic ash, different from the general soil of the valley. No horse or plow is allowed on the ground. That would pack the earth too much, say the men in charge, and all cultivating and preparing of soil is done with a spade, which takes work but sinks deep and leaves the ground in the best of condition. The bulbs were received from Holland last fall and planted outside early in the spring.

According to the contract with the government, one-tenth of the bulbs produced go to the department, but there is profit left for the owners for all that. The government has no share in the blooms, and these have been selling readily in Spokane and in various cities on Puget Sound.

The capacity of the farm will be increased next year, and already the men are making preparations to lease five acres adjoining the tract, which will be filled with bulbs and garden truck.

AUGUST WOLF.

RANK-STEMMED CALLAS.

I have a solid bed of callas on the ground. They grow rank—will not stop growing, although I quit watering them. What shall I do with them so as to make them die down and take a rest?

A. M. B.

A. M. B. does not state what his idea is, or what he expects to gain by the "dying down" of his bed of calla lilies. Under ordinary conditions callas lose their growth of stems and leaves either because of the fact that moisture has been withheld from them or because the frost has nipped them in its annual rounds. As we are now in the early summer and there will be little danger from frost for many months to come, it will be necessary to keep moisture away from the bulbs, as this is the height of their growing season. If there is considerable natural moisture and this is not practicable, and if A. M. B. wishes to dig his bulbs and dry them off, he had better take them up carefully, separate them into various sizes and cut off the growing stems just a short distance above the roots. These can then be dried, either in a dry loft or out in the open, if the weather is suitable. But unless it is for the purpose of transplanting either to sell or replant in some other locality, the writer sees no advantage in disturbing the callas, and the fact that they apparently do not wish a rest should concern no one but themselves, for in this climate the calla practically grows all the time and, unless stopped by the frost or summer drought, can always be depended on to show a nice crop of green leaves and an abundance of blossoms.

SMILAX ON THE COAST.

The proposition of supplying smilax for the florists' trade has become quite a problem on the Pacific coast. Although it is nominally a cheap article of decoration, the demand for the last few seasons has everywhere been far in excess of the supply. As a result there has been great hesitancy shown by retailers and decorators in accepting orders for large quantities. For several years the sale for cut smilax was not large and many of the growers who had been forcing it under glass, planted it in a shade house or under some convenient spread of foliage, as it was not considered a profitable crop to force in a greenhouse.

Smilax does well with us under a shade house. The principal difference between that so grown and the greenhouse product is that the former is of a much darker green and, unless cut late in the season, is of less lasting quality. Under glass it grows more luxuriantly and is of a much lighter color, but the principal item to be taken into consideration is that it will produce several crops from the same amount of space, while that grown outside is producing only one full crop, with probably a short after-picking.

The writer experimented last season with smilax under glass and the same quantity and space in a shade house and the results were about as follows: Taking 1,000 clumps and replanting them during the first week in May, with a plentiful supply of well rotted manure dug into the ground and a light mulching and after giving each lot a thorough soaking, developments were awaited. Those planted under glass were in an old house and those planted outside were in a large lath house, which had been used previously for general stock purposes. The first cutting under glass was made the first part of November, when smilax was selling at $10 per hundred strings of two yards each. The outside smilax at this time was up to the height of four feet but very bushy, and was let go until Thanksgiving time and netted the writer $12.50 per hundred. Both patches were strung up again immediately after cutting, and from the inside lot another 1,000 strings were cut

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSEYMEN.

Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Vice-Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 52d annual convention will be held at Detroit, Mich., June, 1907.

CHRIS LAYTON, Jr., is starting a nursery at Kaysville, Utah.

ADVANCES in freight rates this season have been quite an item to nurserymen.

E. O. GRAHAM, president of the Graham Nursery Co., Rochester, has been in New York City.

SAM DIXON has been appointed inspector of nurseries and orchards in Texas, succeeding A. W. Orr.

CARL SONDEREGGER, Beatrice, Neb., has gone to California with his family for a few weeks' trip on business and pleasure.

THE Fourth National Bank of Dayton, O., has filed a suit against the Albaugh Nursery and Orchard Co. for the recovery of $23,400 alleged to be due.

THE sudden demise of Arthur Bryant, senior member of the firm of Bryant & Son, Princeton, Ill., is reported in the obituary column this week. He was 73 years of age and one of the most widely known nurserymen in the west.

ALTHOUGH the unusual cold which has prevailed in Michigan thus far this spring has put fruit and vegetables a month behind their normal condition at this time, reports agree that the fruit crop will be far from a total failure.

THE Peterson Nursery, Chicago, makes note of a peculiar fact resulting from the unusual weather conditions which have prevailed this season. They say that since the fall planting season for general nursery stock opened, October 6, 1906, they did not for one day cease planting up to May 17, and then there still remained the planting of catalpa and ash.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE GRAPE.

[A paper by Wm. B. Munson, Denison, Tex., read before a recent session of his state horticultural society, continued from the Review of May 9 and 16.]

After the first successful crosses of Lindley and Delaware, the second step made was to try to get that extra earliness and retain the other good points as far as possible. The Brilliant has perfect flowers and is a splendid pollenizer of other varieties blooming at the same time. The Moyer was selected as the next mother because it is very early, of fine, clear red color, nearly equal to the Delaware in quality, and has pistillate flowers; that is, flowers without having erect stamens, or having potent pollen capable of self-fertilization.

From this combination of Brilliant and Moyer a lot of variable varieties was obtained, but most all early and red. The earliest and the best of the lot was carried through the usual severe trial of several years of testing. It is as early as the Champion or earlier, and hence the earliest known. It is very juicy and sweet, the sweetest of all real early varieties, and quality nearly as good as that of the Delaware. The berry is persistent to cluster, the skin as thin and tough as that of the Delaware, hence a fine shipper. This has been named the Headlight.

In this combination no varieties of the native post oak blood were used because this class of grapes all generally ripen late and this would keep us from getting the early quality we were after. But by the same method of improvement we now have many varieties of post oak blood that are giving us grapes long-lived for sandy soils of the south. By this improvement we now have the Beacon, Carman, Hermann Jaeger, Fern and others taking the place of Concord, Ives and Martha. Not only are they more hardy and better adapted varieties than the old northern kinds, but also by taking advantage of the late ripening native kinds and using them as parents with other grapes of high quality, varieties were obtained that prolong the grape season from the former three weeks to one now of eight to ten weeks in such varieties as the Laussel, Fern, Muench, Marguerite and Albania, the best selling and most profitable on account of coming when there is no competition.

For black, waxy lands the Lukfata, Valhalla and Champanel are improved varieties. In these varieties the blood of Vitis Champini and Mustang have been used. These species are natives of limy soils and thus furnish a basis for a list of varieties adapted to such soils.

Much Room Ahead.

The instances mentioned are only improvements over what we have had, but are in no wise the ideals, for the field is Dreer's Hardy Perennial Phlox.

We are the largest growers of Perennial Phlox in the world. Our collection is unequalled, and we are prepared to furnish the new and rare kinds as well as all the popular and standard varieties in large quantities. The plants we offer are nearly all strong one-year-old field-grown plants or equally strong divisions and will make a fine display of flowers this season. This stock is much superior to and must not be confounded with young Winter propagated stock such as is generally sent out in the Spring of the year.

infinite and the possibilities seem unlimited. Take the example of the Headlight. We now have at hand opportunities to still better this grape by crossing it with the Sunrise, an extra early red grape of fine qualities produced by Mr. Bachman, of Arkansas. As this grape has large berries and extra large cluster for early grapes, there is no telling what we may have in store in the third generation from the Lindley. There are now in the third and fourth generations some new varieties that are much improved over the America, Klanta and other strains, which are varieties of the first and second generations. In these cases the fine qualities of the Griesa de Piemonte, Malaga, Calabrain, all fine varieties of the European blood, famous for their high quality, have been used with the blood of the America, which is symbolical of perfect vigor and health for the climate of the fruit soils of Texas. By such combinations we have grapes embodying the good qualities of both vine and fruit of all the parents and the weakness of the vinifera vine has been overcome by the extra good vigor and constitution of the blood in the America and other varieties containing the same specific bloods.

NEWARK, N. J.—August Begerow will erect a four-story apartment building at 946 Broad street. The first floor will be 26x96 and will be occupied by Mr. Begerow as a retail flower store. The building will cost about $20,000.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.—The Dunkley Floral Co. is now, by order of the Kalamazoo county probate court, selling out and will discontinue business. This is one of the oldest places in Michigan and has enjoyed a prosperous trade, but since the death of Mrs. Agnes Dunkley, two years ago, none of the heirs has shown any interest in the active management. W. C. Cook, the present manager, will go, as soon as his duties are completed here, to the Central Michigan Nursery, to take charge of the store and ornamental department.

DENVER.

The Market.

Stock, the last week or two, has been limited for this time of the year. There is a shortage of carnations, which naturally helps all other stock, but nearly all kinds are cleaned up every day. Funeral work reached quite a volume last week and, now that we have some fine weather, it is hoped there will be a more plentiful supply, although the cold weather that prevailed here some two weeks ago played havoc with all outdoor stock, which means that there will be practically nothing but indoor flowers for Decoration day. Orders for out-of-town commencements have already begun to arrive, which furnishes an outlet for a quantity of good stock.

American Beauties are good, especially in the long-stemmed grade; so are Bride, Maid and Chatenay, while Richmond and Liberty are very fine. The prices for Decoration day are not prohibitive, considering the scarcity of outdoor flowers. Carnations of good quality will retail for practically $1 per dozen.

Violets are out of the market, so far as quality goes, but the cool weather of a week ago benefited the plants, so a few still can be obtained. Sweet peas are coming in more abundantly and are generally of good quality at from 50 cents to 75 cents per hundred.

All kinds of green goods are scarce and what fern leaves are obtainable are of poor quality.

Various Notes.

George Henry Gardner, aged 27 years, died in Denver, April 28, 1907, of consumption and was buried at Riverside cemetery, this city, May 1. He had only been here for a few days and was practically unknown to the florists here, although they attended the funeral and took charge, seeing that all expenses were paid. He was born in Kidderminster, Worcestershire, England, and came to Worcester, Mass., and worked for Hugo Book, of College street. It is also reported, from papers found in his pockets, that he was with A. N. Pierson, of Cromwell, Conn. There was also found a postal he had directed to his mother, Mrs. H. Gardner, 6 Yew Tree Road, Kidderminster, Worcestershire, England.

The Park Floral Co. has advices that peonies will be ready just in time for Memorial day.

C. J. David is cutting some fine sweet peas, his pink and white being choice.

HANCOCK, MICH.

The recently organized Lakeside Floral Co., which has absorbed the Lutey Floral Co., of this city, with greenhouses at Chassell and Calumet, has decided to enter the nursery and greenhouse business on a much broader scale. A meeting of the directors of the company was held here May 11, when it was decided to enlarge the plant at Chassell at once, making the capacity nearly double that at present.

The new portion will be devoted to growing carnations and roses. Commencing next fall the company will go in for the growing of winter vegetables at the Calumet greenhouses. They will grow cucumbers, tomatoes, lettuce, radishes and mushrooms.

Within the next few days the company expects to open a branch store in Laurium, by which time it will have the county well covered with branch stores.

It was also decided to engage in the nursery business on a large scale. There are eighty acres adjacent to the plant at Chassell, of which twenty are to be planted at once with nursery stock for next spring.

MANCHESTER, MASS.

The North Shore Horticultural Society held its regular meeting May 17. W. E. Allen showed a vase of fine Enchantress carnations, and was awarded a certificate of merit for superior culture. James Salter received a certificate of merit for Phlox Drummondii, Phlox Miss Lingard and White Column stocks.

The silver cup offered by the Blue Hill Nurseries for the best collection of herbaceous perennials will be competed for at the June show, instead of the August show, as printed in the schedule.

B. Hammond Tracy, the Cedar Acres gladiolus specialist, gave an interesting and instructive lecture on gladioli, enumerating and describing all the best strains of this beautiful flower. A vote of thanks was extended to Mr. Tracy for his lecture. W. T.

RALEIGH, N. C.—Miss Emily Steinmetz and Dr. Guy A. Roberts were married one morning last week at the First Presbyterian church, which was profusely decorated by the bride's father, Henry Steinmetz. Miss Matilda Steinmetz, a sister of the bride, was maid of honor.

EVERYBODY TALKS ABOUT IT!
LIKE THE BEE

An Immense Stock of Bedding Plants Now Ready

The Bee is the first that takes advantage of the Great Work that Godfrey Aschmann, the never resting florist, with the assistance of his three grown-up, wide-a-woke sons, John, Edward and Howard, and together with his faithful employees, have done since Easter. Just think! Everything nearly empty at Easter and now, now, look now, only four weeks have elapsed and such an immense stock ready to put on the market. Can it be possible? No wonder the bees enjoy their lives in Aschmann's greenhouses. Just look how they are swarming. "Oh, Aschmann's flowers taste so sweet," the bees say. "We cannot stop; we have a big field to work on; 100,000 of the choicest plants; every nook and corner full; let us harvest." Secure Bargains now and for Decoration Day.

MONTREAL.

The Market.

The weather has been cold, but with enough rain to help the gardens. The city parks are beginning to look well, with tulips of all colors in abundance. The grass is once again green and fresh looking, though the trees are still rather bare.

Business has been splendid with all the florists. The week commencing May 6 was the horse show week here and everybody got a large share of orders for private and public luncheons and dinners, at which violets and valley formed the chief flowers in the decorations.

Some very good valley is seen about town. The violets are about over. Daffodils and tulips from the gardens are now on the market, though rather small at present. Every florist seems to have a lot of hydrangeas, none of them very good. Bedding plants, especially geraniums, are once more to the fore and selling rapidly.

Various Notes.

P. McKenna & Son hope to open their second store in the near future. It is situated in Bennett's Theater, on St. Catherine street west. They have added a new rig to their establishment, a neat affair of dark green.

Miss Murray reports rushing business. She always has a fine show of flowers and plants. During the horse show week she sold about 15,000 violets.

J. Bennett has given up his retail trade for the present and sells wholesale only. Everything has been satisfactory so far, though his roses and carnations are scarce at present, and he is not able to fill all his orders for the latter, which all the florists claim are as good as those sent in from the west.

Hall & Robinson have a new rig. It ought to bring custom to them, as it attracts much attention. It is bright red, with the lettering done in gold. They have about the tidiest and best managed store in town. Mr. Hall was in Three Rivers last week, decorating the town hall there for the banquet given to the Honorable Mr. Bureau. There were about 350 guests.

S. S. Bain has only one store now, which he personally superintends.

The Wright Floral Co. had an attractive window during the horse show. The flowers, ribbons and paper used were all purple and white, nicely arranged in the front, with three ponies (real ones) in stalls at the back. We were sorry to hear that Mr. Gray was not awarded first place for window decorations, but suppose the judges knew their business best. TOMMY.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

Business has been a little steadier than the last week. Weather conditions have improved somewhat, with the exception of last Sunday, when it stormed all day and hail fell heavily. There seems to be a surplus of potted bedding plants on the market and no reasonable price is refused. Carnations and roses are enough to meet the demand. Sweet peas are more regular. Lilacs are scarce. Lily of the valley is plentiful, while peonies are coming in slowly. Bulbous stock is nearly exhausted. Greens of all kinds are not abundant.

Various Notes.

Lohr & Fritze, Irvington, Md., are breaking ground for another new greenhouse, 35x150 feet.

Charles Seigwart, Station D, will erect another house this fall and is having a fairly good cut of carnations. He is also cutting some extra fine callas.

Conrad Hess and Edw. Kress are again at their old stalls in the market.

Mrs. G. Cook, Arlington, Md., who has been sick since last Christmas, is able to be about again.

Wm. Teipe, Catonsville, Md., is having a fine crop of Lorillard tomatoes coming on inside.

The writer is in receipt of a postal from J. Keur, Hillegom, showing the growing beds of hyacinths.

It is feared by many growers on this side of Anne Arundel county that the heavy hail storm last Sunday broke many lights in the greenhouses of G. A. Lotze, Lehr Bros., John Riders and E. A. Woodfall, as the storm went toward that section.

The next meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club will be a big benefit for the retailers. Business of great importance will be discussed.

J. Bolgiano & Son are having a rushing business in the plant line. Their cash register last week rang up over 3,000 sales.

The Holton Rose potato crop is a failure here with some of the growers.

J. L. Y.

SANDUSKY, O.—D. J. Mackey, proprietor of the Central Greenhouses, is ill in the south and M. S. Mackey, the manager, will sell out the business.

HOUSTON, TEX.—Charles Ehlers says that last year he shipped 70,000 cape jasmine buds without receiving a complaint. The stock this year is better than ever and also more abundant.

ORCHIDS IN EUROPE.

Orchids continue to take a leading place in the upper class horticultural world in Europe. Some large sales have recently taken place in London, and again almost record prices have been realized for individual plants. At the regular shows of the Royal Horticultural Society orchids are in the majority, and often fifty per cent of the new plants which receive certificates, awards of merit, etc., are orchids. The raising of orchids from seeds, especially odontoglossums, is a general practice, and huge quantities of unbloomed and tested seedlings are put into commerce every year. This practice of raising seedlings is probably in a great measure the cause of so many new varieties continually turning up, the orchid being very susceptible to cross fertilization and inoculation.

According to the usual methods, the seeds are sown during January. The seed is sown in the pots occupied by old plants of the same kind that have been recently potted. The dendrobiums, cattleyas, lœlias and some others are said to germinate very quickly and easily. Some of the more experienced growers sow the seed on wood prepared for the purpose. A heat of 80 degrees is required and a very moist, humid atmosphere, and the first plants will be large enough to handle in about seven weeks. One of our leading growers informs me that after a year or so of experience and observation it is as easy to cultivate orchids from seeds as tomatoes, cucumbers or any other of the common plants. J. B.

GOOD FUCHSIAS.

The fuchsia has of late years lost considerable of its popularity in the United States as a plant for the dwelling-room, but in regard to the raising of new varieties, there is a wide scope open to those who could take up this useful class of plants. We get some good Continental varieties, says a writer in a British contemporary, the Horticultural Advertiser, but few of them prove useful for market work. If we could only get other colors with the good habit of Ballet Girl we should be getting into a good type. The first to come into the market this season was Scarcity, a free red variety. This has had a long run, yet it is not an ideal flower. Its great qualities are free-flowering, good growth and earliness. Some of the hybrids of the Lord Beaconsfield type have taken well, and if we could get a little more color in varieties of similar habit, they would take better.

From notes taken last season I find that Royal Purple and Gertrude Pearson are the best singles, with purple corolla and scarlet tube and sepals. These are so nearly alike that one is often substituted for the other. Some of the newer French varieties have fine flowers, but they are wanting in habit. Many of our oldest sorts still hold their own: take Lady Heytesbury, Arabella, Try-me-oh, Mrs. Rundle, Mrs. Marshall; there are none to supersede them. Louis Faucon is one of the best doubles, with purple corolla and scarlet tube and sepals; but this does not seem to have been taken up by market growers. Phenomenal and its varieties have been tried on account of their large flowers, but the habit is not good enough for market work.

In regard to the demand for fuchsias in the markets, as flowering plants for decorations, they have lost favor with many florists through being so easily damaged in transit, but for bedding in England they have come much into favor during the past few years, and where formerly it was only Riccartoni and other hardy sorts that were planted, the better varieties are now found to do equally well for summer bedding.

FLOWERS ON STAMPS.

Japan and Newfoundland are the only countries which have given recognition to the floral kingdom in the issues of their postage stamps. Trees have been portrayed upon stamps by many countries, especially those situated in the tropics, but it is only on the stamps of Newfoundland and Japan that a flower appears. The chrysanthemum, the national flower of Japan, is given a conspicuous place upon all the postage stamps issued by the government, and upon many of the denominations it occupies the central portion of the stamp. For nearly ten years, from 1857 to 1866, a conspicuous feature of all the stamps of Newfoundland was a bouquet of thistle blossoms within the center of a delicately engraved background. This issue of stamps is exceedingly popular with collectors, and is known as "the thistle issue," says the Boston Transcript.

ST. BRIGID ANEMONES.

Those who have seen the brilliant St. Brigid anemones must have been impressed by the wealth of color and beauty which characterize these flowers. For many purposes these St. Brigid anemones are superior to any other section of the poppy or crown anemones, and their value, either as cut flowers or for garden decoration, is indisputable.

The origin of these flowers is unknown to many, and it may be well to mention that they were raised by selection and seeding from other poppy anemones by a Mrs. Lawrenson, who at that time lived at Howth, Ireland. There these windflowers thrived wonderfully. But for continued careful seed selection the strain would return to the original garden poppy anemone.

It is thus necessary, if the true stock is to be obtained from seeds, to secure a well-selected and carefully rogued strain of the St. Brigid anemones. While the tubers of the St. Brigid anemones can be purchased, and it may suit some to buy these, even if they desire to enter upon seed saving for themselves, it is not generally known that they come freely from seeds, that seedlings are more vigorous, and give better flowers, and that by sowing the seeds early in a

PULVERIZED SHEEP MANURE

One of the most effective of fertilizers and largely used by the best growers, both as a top dressing and in the manure tanks. The raw material for Hunt's Sheep Manure is the droppings taken from solid floor sheep corrals. Ordinary manures are largely shoveled up from the ground and contain a large proportion of soil for which you pay, but from which you get nothing except possibly weed seed. favorable season blooms may be had from these seedlings the first autumn.

"While some prefer sowing the seeds of the St. Brigid anemones in frames, in boxes, or pans," says a writer in a British gardening journal, "I prefer sowing in beds in the open, and, with a little precaution, the results are even better, although the seedlings may be a little later in appearing, and by thus sowing the plants may be left undisturbed and covered in autumn with a frame for winter and early spring bloom. This necessitates either very thin sowing or severe thinning out of the seedlings at an early stage. Of the two the thin sowing is preferable, but from the woolly character of the seed it is not easily done. An old method, and one as good as any, is to rub the seeds well among dry sand to separate them as much as possible. The beds should be well dug, and if for permanent or semi-permanent occupation, ought to be manured with thoroughly rotted manure from the cowhouse. The soil must be fine on the surface, and not in a wet condition when the seeds are sown. Some sow them broadcast, but I prefer shallow drills, in which the seeds are sown and covered with about a quarter of an inch of fine soil, the surface being gently pressed with a spade or a piece of board. Unless the weather keeps dry, watering is best left to the rain, but if dry a gentle watering, sufficient, however, to soak the soil, may be applied. The beds may be shaded by means of a few branches, trees, or shrubs, but should not be densely covered.

"When the seedlings appear, the soil, if it has become caked, may lift with the springing of the seedlings, and should this take place it should be watered to settle the earth about the young plants. These need only to be slightly shaded from strong sun until they have made some of their true leaves, when, if too thick, all, or a portion, may be transplanted. The best time to sow in the open is in the end of March or the beginning of April, if the weather is favorable."

The soil for the St. Brigid anemones should be one which is fairly rich, and they thrive excellently under the partial shade of deciduous trees, such as fruit trees.

Frequent renewal of the St. Brigid anemones from seeds is highly desirable, as by this means finer plants and flowers will be produced than from old tubers.

ALVIN, TEX.—The jasmine season is on in full blast now and thousands are being shipped from here daily. Dealers are overrun with orders and find it difficult to fill them, so great is the demand for these flowers. The crop is fine this season and the flowers are extra large and fragrant.

Some large sales have recently taken place in London, and again almost record prices have been realized for individual plants. At the regular shows of the Royal Horticultural Society orchids are in the majority, and often fifty per cent of the new plants which receive certificates, awards of merit, etc., are orchids. The raising of orchids from seeds, especially odontoglossums, is a general practice, and huge quantities of unbloomed and tested seedlings are put into commerce every year. This practice of raising seedlings is probably in a great measure the cause of so many new varieties continually turning up, the orchid being very susceptible to cross fertilization and inoculation.

According to the usual methods, the seeds are sown during January. The seed is sown in the pots occupied by old plants of the same kind that have been recently potted. The dendrobiums, cattleyas, lilies and some others are said to germinate very quickly and easily. Some of the more experienced growers sow the seed on wood prepared for the purpose. A heat of 80 degrees is required and a very moist, humid atmosphere, and the first plants will be large enough to handle in about seven weeks. One of our leading growers informs me that after a year or so of experience and observation it is as easy to cultivate orchids from seeds as tomatoes, cucumbers or any other of the common plants. J. GOOD FUCHSIAS.

The fuchsia has of late years lost considerable of its popularity in the United States as a plant for the dwelling-room, but in regard to the raising of new varieties, there is a wide scope open to those who could take up this useful class of plants. We get some good Continental varieties, says a writer in a British contemporary, the Horticultural Advertiser, but few of them prove useful for market work. If we could only get other colors with the good habit of Ballet Girl we should be getting into a good type. The first to come into the market this season was Scarcity, a free red variety. This has had a long run, yet it is not an ideal flower. Its great qualities are free-flowering, good growth and earliness. Some of the hybrids of the Lord Beaconsfield type have taken well, and if we could get a little more color in varieties of similar habit, they would take better.

From notes taken last season I find that Royal Purple and Gertrude Pearson are the best singles, with purple corolla and scarlet tube and sepals. These are nearly alike and one is often substituted for the other. Some of the newer French varieties have fine flowers, but they are wanting in habit. Many of our oldest sorts still hold their own: take Lady Heytesbury, Arabella, Try me oh, Mrs. Rundle, Mrs. Marshall; there are none to supersede them. Louis Facon is one of the best doubles, with purple corolla and scarlet tube and sepals; but this does not seem to have been taken up by market growers. Phenomenal and its varieties have been tried on account of their large flowers, but the habit is not good enough for market work.

In regard to the demand for fuchsias in the markets, as flowering plants for decorations, they have lost favor with many florists through being so easily damaged in transit, but for bedding in England they have come much into favor during the past few years, and where formerly it was only Riccartoni and other hardy sorts that were planted, the better varieties are now found to do equally well for summer bedding.

FLOWERS ON STAMPS.

Japan and Newfoundland are the only countries which have given recognition to the floral kingdom in the issues of their postage stamps. Trees have been portrayed upon stamps by many countries, especially those situated in the tropics, but it is only on the stamps of Newfoundland and Japan that a flower appears. The chrysanthemum, the national flower of Japan, is given a conspicuous place upon all the postage stamps issued by the government, and upon many of the denominations it occupies the central portion of the stamp. For nearly ten years, from 1857 to 1866, a conspicuous feature of all the stamps of Newfoundland was a bouquet of thistle blossoms within the center of a delicately engraved background. This issue of stamps is exceedingly popular with collectors, and is known as "the thistle issue," says the Boston Transcript.

ST. BRIGID ANEMONES.

Those who have seen the brilliant St. Brigid anemones must have been impressed by the wealth of color and beauty which characterize these flowers. For many purposes these St. Brigid anemones are superior to any other section of the poppy or crown anemones, and their value, either as cut flowers or for garden decoration, is indisputable.

The origin of these flowers is unknown to many, and it may be well to mention that they were raised by selection and seeding from other poppy anemones by a Mrs. Lawrenson, who at that time lived at Howth, Ireland. There these windflowers thrived wonderfully. But for continued careful seed selection the strain would return to the original garden poppy anemone.

It is thus necessary, if the true stock is to be obtained from seeds, to secure a well-selected and carefully rogued strain of the St. Brigid anemones. While the tubers of the St. Brigid anemones can be purchased, and it may suit some to buy these, even if they desire to enter upon seed saving for themselves, it is not generally known that they come freely from seeds, that seedlings are more vigorous, and give better flowers, and that by sowing the seeds early in a favorable season blooms may be had from these seedlings the first autumn.

"While some prefer sowing the seeds of the St. Brigid anemones in frames, in boxes, or pans," says a writer in a British gardening journal, "I prefer sowing in beds in the open, and, with a little precaution, the results are even better, although the seedlings may be a little later in appearing, and by thus sowing the plants may be left undisturbed and covered in autumn with a frame for winter and early spring bloom. This necessitates either very thin sowing or severe thinning out of the seedlings at an early stage. Of the two the thin sowing is preferable, but from the woolly character of the seed it is not easily done. An old method, and one as good as any, is to rub the seeds well among dry sand to separate them as much as possible. The beds should be well dug, and if for permanent or semi-permanent occupation, ought to be manured with thoroughly rotted manure from the cowhouse. The soil must be fine on the surface, and not in a wet condition when the seeds are sown. Some sow them broadcast, but I prefer shallow drills, in which the seeds are sown and covered with about a quarter of an inch of fine soil, the surface being gently pressed with a spade or a piece of board. Unless the weather keeps dry, watering is best left to the rain, but if dry a gentle watering, sufficient, however, to soak the soil, may be applied. The beds may be shaded by means of a few branches, trees, or shrubs, but should not be densely covered.

"When the seedlings appear, the soil, if it has become caked, may lift with the springing of the seedlings, and should this take place it should be watered to settle the earth about the young plants. These need only to be slightly shaded from strong sun until they have made some of their true leaves, when, if too thick, all, or a portion, may be transplanted. The best time to sow in the open is in the end of March or the beginning of April, if the weather is favorable."

The soil for the St. Brigid anemones should be one which is fairly rich, and they thrive excellently under the partial shade of deciduous trees, such as fruit trees.

Frequent renewal of the St. Brigid anemones from seeds is highly desirable, as by this means finer plants and flowers will be produced than from old tubers.

Greenhouse Heating.

STEAM FOR FIVE HOUSES.

I am planning the erection of a block of five parallel greenhouses and desire some information regarding them. Houses No. 1 and No. 2, each 25x132 feet, are intended for carnation houses and will require a night temperature of 55 degrees. Houses No. 3 and No. 4, each 15x132 feet, are for roses and should have a temperature of 60 degrees. House No. 5 is 9x132 feet and is for miscellaneous stock, requiring a temperature of 55 degrees. The houses will run east and west, with a glass gable in the west end. The boiler will be under the shed at the east end. How should each be piped for steam and what horsepower of horizontal tubular boiler would be required? Would this plan be satisfactory or would it be better to run the houses north and south, with the shed at the north end? I expect to get water from a spring-pond and should like to get your advice as to the water plant. What can I do to avoid a boiler pit?

J. H. C.

In reply to your query regarding the direction and piping of your houses, will say my personal preference with even-span houses is that they run north and south, with the work-room and heating plant at the north end.

Houses No. 1 and No. 2 should each be provided with a 3-inch flow under the ridge and fourteen 1¼-inch returns the length of the house. Houses No. 3 and No. 4 should each be provided with a 2½-inch flow under the ridge and ten 1¼-inch returns, while house No. 5 should have a 2-inch riser under the ridge and seven 1¼-inch returns.

By installing a return steam trap you can arrange the boiler on the level or the greenhouses. This will require the overhead risers as suggested, and all the water of condensation will be returned into a hot well, from which it can be lifted to the boiler by the steam trap. The water plant can be arranged by use of a ram, windmill or power pump driven by motor, gas engine or steam engine. I am inclined to believe that either gasoline or steam power will be most satisfactory. The water would be delivered direct to mains or into an elevated storage tank as desired.

If you use a gravity system, the water level in the boiler should be at least two feet below the level of the lowest radiating pipes in the houses; more would be better. The boilers should have a rated capacity to carry 4,000 square feet of radiation or more. One return tubular boiler, rated at forty horsepower, should be sufficient to heat this plant.

houses suffered again last week. Everything was cheap. Much more stock is coming in than the local or shipping trade can use up. The complaint seems general, so we must have our share of it.

Roses in all grades were almost given away. Most of the great lot of fancy long Beauties went to waste for want of demand. The same can be said of Bride, Richmond, Maid, Perle, Killarney, Carnot and Chatenay. Carnations suffered also in the low prices. These are again plentiful. White sold well last week, but the colored stock went fast asleep. Enchantress, too, sold well when extra fancy.

Peonies in pink, white and red are selling well. Valley is dragging; so are callas and Harrisii. All outdoor stock is bringing little, if anything. The market is short of good ferns. Other greens are plentiful.

DETROIT.

The Market.

Stock is much more plentiful than last week, due probably to the fact that business was not quite so rushing. There is still little doing in the wedding line, although the month of June is nearly here. The long-looked-for warm weather has at last come, and with it many orders for outdoor bedding. There seems to be a scarcity of bedding stock this season.

Many good roses are coming into this market and the only outlet for poor stock is through the street fakers. Carnations are also good and in big demand. Sweet peas are arriving in large quantities and selling well at from 40 cents to 75 cents per hundred. Good white are hardly equal to the demand. Smilax is again equal to the demand.

Club Meeting.

The last meeting of the Detroit Florists' Club, held May 15, was fairly well attended. Before getting down to business the cigars were passed around by Fred Miesel, the advent being of Fred Miesel, Jr.

A motion was made and stood as approved that the secretary send a vote of thanks to the National Cash Register Co., of Dayton, O., on behalf of the club, for the fine lecture delivered at Harmonie hall.

George Rackham read a fine paper, entitled "Wholesale and Retail." Mr. Rackham's paper elicited quite a lengthy discussion. One of the questions brought up was whether it paid a retailer to own or at least be directly connected with greenhouses. Opinions differed on this, one thing being sure, that the retail man who has glass of his own has a decided advantage, especially when it comes to large decorations. Those store men who have no glass seemed to think they were just as well off, and vice versa.

Part of the evening was given over to cement benches and their construction. Most of the members present were of the opinion that a good, substantial form, or set of forms, in which to mold the different parts, the same to be bought outright by the florist, would be the best arrangement.

Wm. Dilger is down for a paper entitled "Two Score and Ten," for the evening of the next meeting, June 5. Just what the contents of this paper will

NEW ORLEANS.

The Horticultural Society.

The New Orleans Horticultural Society held its monthly meeting May 16. Secretary C. R. Panter was not present, being still sick, though improving. P. Abele took his place pro tem. The fall chrysanthemum show seems to be coming rather slow, but no doubt sure, and Chairman E. Baker not being present there was little discussion on that subject.

James Newsham had a spray of Cattleya Dowiana, the first flower of the first batch of orchids which he received some time ago from his collector in Costa Rica. Mr. Newsham is expecting another lot soon.

H. Papworth had a sample of Nephrolepis Amerpohlil, no doubt the only one in town. The fern was thought an improvement on its predecessors and will be still more appreciated if it does not revert to the parent, the Boston fern, as the others are doing more or less.

FLORIST.....

BRIDES' BOUQUETS.

The Effort for the Unusual.

When the florist is called upon to make a bride's bouquet, his first thought is to turn out a bouquet which is above the commonplace. He realizes that the best is expected of him, and the bouquet which is to attract notice at the wedding ceremony will in a measure be a standard by which his capabilities will be judged. Often in the effort to excel himself he goes too far, and the result is the failure to achieve the very end in view, the creation of a bouquet which shall be of special excellence.

Do not be led away from correct principles by your desire to build a bride's "bunch" that shall be notable. Remember that your recompense is neither in proportion to the size of the bouquet nor the quantity of flowers used. In times gone by the bride's bouquet was flat, crowded and edged with a solid circle of green. The effect was heavy, tiresome and just what one would expect from the effort to get results by the use of quantity. Get away from it; use fewer flowers, arrange them loosely, and the result will be grace.

Size of Bouquet.

Size does not make excellence in a bride's bouquet, and size should be governed, more than by anything else, by the physique of the bride. A slight, girlish figure calls for a bouquet in keeping; you could send a much bigger bunch to a buxom bride, but too frequently even the bride of such proportions as to give promise of being able to keep the groom well in hand through life is started on her matrimonial voyage bearing a bouquet which, instead of adding to the beauty of her wedding gown, seems to partake of the nature of a burden. It is better to err on the side of having the bouquet hardly large enough than to have it too large and heavy looking.

Particularly, you should know the stature of the bride if making a shower bouquet, else you may make the shower too long or too short. Also you should consider the general character of the wedding. The more elaborate the other features, the more elaborate your bouquet may fittingly be.

Material.

The finest bride's bouquets are made of orchids, but the year around valley is used for probably seven out of ten. Sweet peas have been largely used this spring. White lilac is popular for this purpose in winter. For a big brunette you could well employ tight buds of Chatenay, Kate Moulton, Wellesley or similar roses, formally arranged, with ribbon or simple embellishment. Fine foliage, like asparagus or adiantum, makes a good border or edge for the top bunch. Even a wide fringe of adiantum will not make the bouquet too heavy. Valley largely supplies its own foliage.

For a good bouquet there will be required from 100 to 200 lilies of the valley, whether it is proposed to have the full shower effect, or the round hand bouquet with the partial shower effect.

Form of the Bouquet.

The top of the bouquet should be round, but not like a ball. It should the valley is used, all the leaves should be separated, so that they may be lowered a little below the level of the flower spikes. This is done so that the finished bouquet will look like a mass of white flowers and not like a bouquet of green and white. The handles of bouquets are made as small and as short as possible that they may be conveniently held, and when holding them the stem will be entirely unseen. The use of green in bouquets of valley should receive careful attention. Generally speaking, the less used the better.

The Shower.

Material for the streamers in the shower may be fine strands of green, like smilax or asparagus, or a cluster of different lengths of narrow ribbon, in gauze, satin taffeta or velvet ribbon, white or cream. The gauze or chiffon tasseled ribbon is a dainty shower material. Avoid tying many knots in the not look crowded, but loose and graceful, the outline broken every once in a while. The tying of the flowers so that they will fall into the right position necessitates the cleaning of part of the stems, and the lengthening and shortening of them as required. When lily of streamers by tying the flowers on with tiny bows of 4-inch to 5-inch lengths of the same width ribbon. Catch two streamers together and drape slightly in two or three places in the shower.

When a scarf is added, as in the illustration, it always should hang behind the shower, which should be light enough for the scarf to be seen through it. These gauze scarfs now are offered by the leading supply houses in a wide range of styles and qualities and are a decided acquisition for many purposes, but for a bride's bouquet select one not too heavy. It always should be slightly longer than the longest ribbon in the shower.

Putting Together.

The actual work of construction of a bride's bouquet, to a skilled designer, is a purely mechanical operation, but to a beginner it is a serious matter. Short-stemmed flowers cannot be used without artificial mounting. Even long-stemmed valley needs wiring for extra length. Detach the foliage, move it down and wire several spikes on half a match-stick, or it can be done on wire. The green not only serves as a background for the white bells but also spreads the spikes apart, adds grace and makes a larger bunch without using an immense number of flowers. It also reduces the size of the stem of the bouquet, the advantage of which is not difficult to see. Fasten the bunches together with a tight clasp of wire. Then attach your shower. Cover the wired stems with green and wrap the whole stem of the bouquet with white ribbon or silk to protect the hands, after turning in all stray ends of wire or prickly foliage.

PLANTING.

With the bench filled in good shape and the distances properly marked off, the work of planting is comparatively easy. The ball should be as little disturbed as possible, simply rubbing off the sharp edges around the top. Some growers do not even remove the drainage from the bottom of the ball. Any ball showing dryness should be dipped in a pail of water before being planted, as it is difficult to thoroughly moisten the ball after being planted.

The ball should be planted just deep enough to cover it, leaving a slight depression around it to facilitate watering. The soil should be pressed moderately firm and, as the crops are to remain a year at least in the benches, it will certainly pay to exercise a little care and judgment in planting.

Water each plant slowly around the ball, taking care not to saturate the rest of the soil. Continue this individual watering for at least a week, or until the moisture will meet between the lines. Keep the syringe going, and especially during hot weather. This serves the double purpose of keeping off spiders and keeping the atmosphere cool and moist. Keep the walks moist and give plenty of fresh air and, if these conditions are attended to and the plants are of good constitution, they must grow.

RIBES.

USE FRESH NICOTINE.

When an insecticide fails to do what we expect of it, we generally blame the maker, or his stuff, and invariably overlook the possibility of ourselves having contributed to the failure. Some years ago, when nicotine solutions began to find favor in gardens, says a writer in the Gardeners' Magazine, I heard a gardener roundly abusing a bottle of a well-known brand, which he said was no better than water. And he spoke the truth. He had had the bottle in store for over twelve months, and although it was tightly corked and sealed, the contents was almost odorless and tasteless. To make assurance doubly sure, we soaked an aphid in the pure solution, and it started to walk off unharmed. And yet that same brand of nicotine was and is splendid when fresh. Should not the manufacturer warn growers against keeping it too long?

THE KLAGGE PLANT.

Robert Klagge's plant at Mount Clemens, Mich., contains about 75,000 to 85,000 square feet of glass devoted to the growing of a general line of stock for the wholesale market. Last year he went into the growing of bulbous stock on a large scale, meeting with good success. One of the accompanying illustrations is from a photograph made in his shed March 27, and shows the bulbous stock for Easter ready for sending out to customers.

It will be remembered that at one time Mr. Klagge was known in the trade as the Mount Clemens violet king. He abdicated several years ago, for there was an insurrection among the plants and they ruled him instead of longer accepting with responsive spirit his most careful ministrations. Since then roses and carnations have been the leading items. The larger of the accompanying illustrations shows a house of Kaiserin roses grown for spring and summer blooming. It will be noted that the plants are on solid beds built with brick side walls, after the fashion popular with Mount Clemens growers. The picture speaks for itself in the matter of the health and vigor of the stock and the abundance of the crop. Mr. Klagge's stock always is good and sells well.

Additional glass is being built from year to year. At present the heating system for the whole plant is being overhauled, and two new boilers are being installed, making it one of the most up-to-date places in that part of the country.

H. S.

PETUNIAS FOR STOCK.

How should stock plants of petunias be treated in order to get cuttings for another year?

F. B. F.

Petunias in pots will be inclined to flower now. Pick off all flowers, shorten back the shoots and they will break away strongly. If these persist in throwing flowers, continue the picking off of flowers and pinching the shoots until the end of August, after which time it would be well to start propagating.

Unless it is desired to work up stock of double varieties, or some especially fine single, it is much easier to propagate from seed. Separate colors may be bought and few rogues will be found in a packet.

VINES AND VINE CULTURE.

We only too often see the results of the supposition that vines will grow anywhere, and under the most unfavorable conditions, and, while we occasionally see a vine doing remarkably well when planted under those conditions, it simply coincides with like happenings in other fields of mistaken endeavor. Climbing roses or, more properly speaking, trailing roses, are exceedingly well adapted for covering trellises, tree stumps, fences and many other fixtures or erections that would, if left uncovered, be objectionable, but it is not so much as a cover that roses are valuable but because of the charming effect produced by them while in bloom. It cannot be expected that roses planted within the confines of small holes and having their roots merely covered with indifferent soil will grow luxuriantly and bloom profusely. The wonder is that they manage to live at all. Roses should be planted in good, rich soil, no matter what their mission may be; whether intended to cover a tree stump, the side of a house, or other building, or a fence. And, for that matter, the same rule in relation to soil for roses applies with almost equal force to all vines planted with the intention of permanent utility and satisfactory results.

There are in commerce vines suited for most all purposes within reason. For covering decayed trees with the branches still attached there are but few things better than the trumpet vine, Tecoma radicans. For the same purpose Ampelopsis Veitchii is very satisfactory, and so is English ivy, but the latter cannot be depended upon to stand the winters like the former two. But when a dense covering is desirable for a building, and means for protection in winter are available, English ivy is invaluable.

The many varieties of honeysuckle are well adapted for trellises and piazzas and if such ornamental features as arches are desirable, honeysuckle will lend itself admirably in the construction.

For large buildings, when a hardy flowering vine is desired, nothing beats the wistaria for graceful adornment and picturesque effect.

A vine beautiful in foliage and delightful in its wild ramifications before it becomes resplendent in a glorious mass of white flowers, during the latter part of August, is Clematis paniculata. This vine is not only one of the best, if not the best, for porches and piazzas, but it is also hard to beat when something is wanted that will be ornamental in quick order when planted against cedar posts, singly or in groups on the lawn, or in close proximity to herbaceous borders, or shrubberies. Taking it all in all, there is no other vine that possesses so many good points as Clematis paniculata.

It sometimes happens that a vine is desired that will give a tropical effect when in leaf. For that purpose Aristolochia Sipho, the Dutchman's pipe, is the best obtainable.

One of the hardiest vines is the bitter sweet, Celastrus scandens. It has also in its favor the quality of endurance in poor soil and in sunshine and partial shade.

Akebia quinata is a desirable vine, but it succeeds best when planted in rich soil, in a sunny situation. The flowers of this vine are almost purple in hue and occasionally fruit develops, which is very ornamental.

The jessamines are desirable vines for planting in sections of the country where the winters are not severe enough to kill them. These vines are especially noteworthy because of the fragrance of their flowers.

Once in a while there is a call for a vine having for its chief characteristic that of inconspicuousness and that quality is vested in Ficus pumila, which is well adapted for covering low walls unostentatiously.

For ground cover, and especially under the partial shade of deciduous trees of large dimensions, Vinca minor, the periwinkle, is about the best thing obtainable.

For arbors nothing beats the grape vine, especially when such arbors are situated in locations where it is imperative that reliance can be placed on them for covering. D. M.

CYCAS REVOLUTA.

How long will Cycas revoluta bulbs lie dormant? I have some which have been out for almost a year? What treatment is necessary to get them started to growing again and how long will it be before they show signs of life? What compost is best suited for them? In what proportion should it be mixed? F. B. F.

Cycas revoluta stems ought to start in much less time than a year. They should be placed in as small pots as possible after being received, given a warm, moist house, be kept freely syringed and growth ought to be appearing in from three to six months. Perhaps your stems have been kept too cool and airy and have been insufficiently watered. Try them in the warmest house you have and if there is life in them it will soon show itself. C. W.

THE BIG LEMON.

The accompanying illustration is reproduced from a photograph of a Ponderosa lemon growing and fruiting in an Indiana florist's greenhouse. The size of the fruits is not exceptional, although it is not a usual thing to find so many well developed fruits on one plant. Instances are common where these lemons have weighed two pounds each and in many cases florists growing them in the greenhouses have been able to secure much good advertising through calling public attention by means of news notes in the local papers. The reporter usually thinks the lemon the greatest novelty of the horticultural world and writes enthusiastically about it, which brings the whole neighborhood to see. With an Otaheite orange and a Ponderosa lemon one would have a combination that would draw crowded houses.

The picture reproduced would have been much better, and probably the plant would have been more interesting to visitors, had the cycas and other surrounding plants been cleared away. It is never possible to get a good picture of a plant when the area in range of the lens is filled with other objects.

gone, hardly worth carrying any longer. Utilize such a bench for your ferns. Of course, they will need some shade, but far too often the various varieties of nephrolepis get too much of it and are made soft and flabby. While they do not appreciate direct sunshine, they do much better when rather lightly shaded.

All the nephrolepis varieties grow much faster on benches than in pots, and any young stock you may have should be placed in four or five inches of loam to which a good dash of sand and leaf-mold has been added. If kept well watered, shaded carefully until established and given common-sense treatment, they grow surprisingly fast. Use a cloth along the front of the bench for a time, at least, to keep the beds closer and less exposed to the air.

Small ferns in pots for growing on should not be allowed to become too much potbound before being repotted. Look out for snails on adiantums and lay traps in the form of hollowed portions of potatoes or cabbage leaves, examining them daily.

Be careful that enough shading is given the palms, or the kentias will easily scorch or turn yellow. If you have forgotten to repot any needing it, take an early opportunity to do so. As the weather becomes warmer and the trees become heavy with foliage, some of the hardier ones may be placed outdoors under some high-branched and shady deciduous tree. The latania, corypha, phoenix and rhaps all do well outdoors from early June until the danger of frost threatens in September.

Lily of the Valley.

This is one of the flowers of which few people seem to tire. At present it is in full beauty in the open and seldom have we seen finer spikes or larger bells, thanks to rich treatment and an abundant rainfall. Every florist doing any retail trade, or having a call for

SEASONABLESUGGESTIONS*Early Planting.

One more Memorial day will have come and gone when these notes appear in print. We hope it will be a busy and profitable holiday for all REVIEW readers. The late season has made it difficult to execute orders for bedding out, which are usually filled before May 30, but late frosts and snowfalls, with continued abnormally low temperature for the latter part of May, have combined to make this work risky. We have seen some beds of coleus and alternanthera which present a rather sorry appearance. Nothing is gained by early planting of this sort of stock. On the contrary, the chilled plants never make anything like the show they would, had they been kept under cover ten days longer. Still, if customers insist on early planting and are willing to take the risks, it need not cause us any special worry. Bedding out will occupy much of our time for the next two or three weeks and home work may be neglected. See, at least, that watering and ventilation are carefully attended to.

The Compost Heap.

The compost pile, prepared probably last fall just before freezing up weather, if not already attended to, should be weeded and turned over, chopping up the larger and more fibrous pieces of turf. There soon will be much planting to do inside, and it is poor policy to have your stock ready to plant and no properly prepared compost to use. Perhaps you grow a variety of stock and do not want to bother with separate piles of compost for your roses, carnations, violets and mums. We have for some years taken the same mixture for all four classes of plants and none has seemed to do poorly in it. If you have not added the bone to your compost, sprinkle some in as you turn it over, but do not mix in a lot of green manure from the cow or horse barn. Than to do this it is much better to plant in comparatively poor compost and feed judiciously as required. Compost piles are more important than many growers give them credit for being. How often do we see them a wilderness of rank-growing weeds, which must be mowed down before the loam can be reached at all!

Plants for pot culture should have a pile of pure turfy loam, without any manure added, reserved for them.

Possibly cut-worms, June bug larvae and similar pests abound in your soil. If sterilization cannot be carried out, you can clear out many of these pests by buying a bottle of bisulphide of carbon and dropping a little in holes bored at intervals of a foot and a half to two feet apart each way over the pile. Care should be taken to fill the holes up quickly and not to use any matches for any purpose, as the fumes are explosive. This bisulphide may also be used on the benches and does not injure the plants at all.

Ferns and Palms.

That most useful of all foliage plants, the Boston fern and many "improvements" or rather variations of it, should now be receiving some attention. Probably you have some carnations getting spidery and, after Memorial day is funeral work, should have a bed of valley. While the plants prefer a little shade, they will succeed well in the open if the ground is rich and the soil deep.

Otaheite Orange, Selaginellas and Leucothoe.

Single pips planted as soon as procurable in the fall, in rows eighteen to twenty-four inches apart, will in three or four years make thick rows, which may need dividing and replanting within five or six years if the quality is to be kept high. Give your valley rich land and a liberal top dressing every fall. Keep weeds in check and you will have a bed of which your neighbors will be envious. Be sure not to cut off the foliage while green, or you will ruin your flower crop for the succeeding year. Berlin pips have always given us excellent results for outdoor planting.

Lilies.

If you potted some bulbs of Lilium speciosum, L. tigrinum or L. auratum last November, they will now be growing vigorously and should have a cool, airy house, with applications of manure water once a week. Where there is a call for summer plants in pots, these lilies are useful and the flowers also are of much value in design or bouquet work. L. speciosum album is perhaps the most valuable and is a good seller in the markets at all times.

Retarded bulbs potted early in July will flower for Christmas, when they will be found especially valuable. During the last few years retarded bulbs have been considerably used, but in this respect we are still much behind our English cousins. The big London growers, like the Rochfords, use them in immense numbers. Sprinkle some tobacco dust on the tops of the shoots to keep green aphids in check. It quickly spoils many of the little buds if given any quarter at all.

Gloxinias and Tuberous Begonias.

Early potted plants of gloxinias and tuberous begonias should now be flowering freely. They require a house with fairly heavy shading, the gloxinias requiring it more than the begonias. A temperature of 55 to 60 degrees at night and a little air from the top ventilators all the time will keep them stocky, and the gloxinia flowers will stand erect instead of falling over, as is the case when grown hot and stuffy. If you water with the hose, wet the foliage as little as possible and never spray the plants overhead, or flowers and foliage will quickly resent it. Keep seedlings of gloxinias and begonias potted on as required and they will make nice stock for blooming in late summer.

Brief Reminders.

Shift your single-stem chrysanthemums into larger pots if benches are not ready, rather than allow them to become hard and matted at the roots.

The poet's narcissus, N. poeticus, is a grand flower for Memorial day. The bulbs are cheap and a bed containing a thousand or so will soon pay for itself.

Be sure the hoe is kept going among all growing crops. The more you stir, the better your plants will grow. No plants will thrive when the ground is baked.

Amaryllis Belladonna should now be completing its growth and can be rested under the sashes of a frame or on any dry, sunny bank outdoors. The flowers are beautiful and serviceable in October.

There is time still for another batch of chrysanthemum cuttings. Put in plenty of the stand-bys, like Bonnaillon, Ivory, Nonin, Halliday and Eaton. Cuttings rooted now will make nice, bushy little stock in 6-inch or 7-inch pots for retail trade.

If you have a demand for cut annuals, put in another sowing of such plants as lupines, annual larkspurs, mignonette, stocks, asters and selected colors of nasturtiums.

Is your smilax about ready for planting in the bed? It will grow better in a solid bed than in a raised bench.

Iris Hispanica and Gladiolus Colvillei in variety are excellent Memorial day flowers. Have you ever tried them? If not, make a note of them and order this fall.

Look out for the slugs on your hardy roses. Use hellebore when it shows itself. For green aphids, spray with kerosene emulsion or whale oil soap.

FERTILIZERS.

Decidedly the best fertilizer that can be used is well rotted stable manure. In most cases where a commercial fertilizer is used, some manure should be used with it. It is important in fertilizing soil to improve its physical condition, as well as its chemical composition. It should be made loose, so that the roots of plants may readily absorb the food it contains. For this purpose manures are unexcelled.

The National Council of Horticulture says the physical properties of soil have a large influence on fertility. The most common means of loss of fertility is through leaching, or the mechanical washing away of nourishing properties. Soils which have a large proportion of clay are finely grained and compact, thus making it easy for the plant food they contain to be washed away. At the same time the compactness frequently retains the elements of fertility tenaciously against their use by plants.

If a commercial fertilizer is used, it should be a mixture that gives a complete fertilizer, supplying all the elements needed to make rich soil.

DAHLIA FIRE RAIN.

For many years Lyndhurst has been our brightest, richest dahlia for cutting purposes, especially when used under artificial light, says the Henry A. Dreer Co., but in unfavorable seasons it is late in flowering. In the new variety, Fire Rain, which was sent to us by a specialist in Germany and which we have had under trial for two seasons, we have not only the rich cardinal red color which has made Lyndhurst so desirable, but a plant that produces masses of bloom early and continuously throughout the season. We consider Fire Rain a most valuable addition to our list of decorative varieties, both for garden display and as a cut flower.

MARSHALL, MICH.—W. M. Stuart, the stationer and jeweler, is going into the florists' business.

PETER OLSEM.

The superintendent of the growing end of the business of the Chicago Carnation Co., Joliet, Ill., is Peter Olsem. He has been connected with the company for five years, always being in close touch with the late James Hartshorne, of whose ideas of growing the carnation he has a thorough knowledge. Mr. Hartshorne was an acknowledged expert in the management of the carnation, and Mr. Olsem has made fully as good a showing this season. He bids fair to rank among the leading carnation growers of the country.

Mr. Olsem was born in Scandinavia August 11, 1879, coming to this country in 1892. He at once engaged in the florists' business with growers at what was known at that time as Rogers Park, now a part of the city of Chicago. He at once selected the carnation as his specialty, and has been connected, directly or indirectly, with leading carnation growers ever since. Being naturally interested in greenhouse construction problems, he spent several summers with Michael Winandy, returning to the growing of carnations each winter, and is well informed in this important detail of an up-to-date grower's work, the building and heating of greenhouses.

QUANTITY OF POTASSIUM.

Will you please tell me what is the right quantity of hydrocyanic acid gas to use in fumigating for white fly? I have four houses, all the same size. Each is 26x290. The side walls are five feet high and the ridge eleven feet. The south span is sixteen feet; the north fourteen feet. P. J. S.

The formula for generating hydrocyanic acid gas has been stated so often that it may be supposed what is wanted in this case is a solution for the problem in mathematics. The method of figuring out such a problem also has been printed several times, but for the benefit of those who are better growers than mathematicians, here it is again:

A simple, though rather tedious, method of ascertaining the number of cubic feet in greenhouses, is as follows: First draw a diagram of the end of your house. Draw a line across from the eaves and one down from the ridge to this first line. In the house given in this question the perpendicular line will cut the horizontal line at one side of the center of the house. If you have drawn by a scale, or if you measure in the house itself, you will find this point is thirteen feet eight inches from one plate and twelve feet four inches from the other. We then have to compute the contents of three separate unequal sections and add them.

First find the cubic contents of the main part of the house, the part below the level of the eaves, by multiplying the length by the width and then multiplying the product by the height of the side walls. Thus, taking the dimensions as given in this case, $290 \times 26 \times 5 = 37,700$ cubic feet. Then, to find the contents of the triangle formed by the long span of your house, multiply the length of the house by the width of the part of the house under the long span, multiply the product by the height from the level of the plate to the ridge, and divide the result by 2. Thus, $290 \times 13\frac{2}{3} \times 6 = 23,780$; dividing this by 2, you have 11,890 as the number of cubic feet in the long span triangle. Next find the contents of the triangle formed by the short span in the same way. Thus, $290 \times 12\frac{1}{3} \times 6 = 21,460$; half of which is 10,730, the number of cubic feet in the short span triangle. Adding the three results—the number of cubic feet in the body of the house, in the long span and in the short span—thus, $37,700 + 11,890 + 10,730$, you have 60,320 as the total number of there would be four sections to calculate.

The foregoing method is worthy of attention because the reason for each step in the process is easily understood, but the same result can be obtained, when both eave plates are the same distance from the floor, with equal certainty and exactness and with much less trouble, by the following rule: Multiply the length of the house by its width, and multiply the result by the height of the side walls plus half the height from the level of the eave plates to the ridge. Thus, using again the dimensions of your greenhouse, $5 + 3 = 8$, and $290 \times 26 \times 8 = 60,320$, the total number of cubic feet in the house. In applying this rule, it makes no difference, so long as the eaves or gutters are the same height, whether the house is even-span or not, as you can learn from text-books in arithmetic or prove by your own experiments.

Now as to the formula: Wm. Scott's formula is generally accepted. It is as follows: Water, one pint; sulphuric acid, one pint; ninety-eight per cent potassium cyanide, two and one-half ounces. This quantity for one jar for each 1,500 cubic feet of space in the house. Dividing 60,300 by 1,500, we find that in the present example forty jars are required. Distribute them as evenly as possible about the house, after first closing it up tightly. Mix the water cubic feet in the greenhouse. This would be the method were the eave plates not of the same height, in which case you would draw your line from the ridge clear to the ground and then from each plate draw a horizontal line in till it reached the perpendicular one. Then and acid in each jar (one gallon butter jars are good), and on the bench beside it lay the package of cyanide put up by your druggist. Have a man for each path. Begin at the far end and let all advance together, each dropping his packages into the liquid as he passes.

Establishment of Albert F. Amling, Maywood, Ill.

Don't stop. Remember that no man should go faster than the others. Don't turn back. The gas is fatal to men as well as white fly. When all are out, lock the house and leave it till morning. Before entering, leave it open a while.

Potassium cyanide costs from about 30 to 50 cents per pound, according to the amount purchased. Commercial sulphuric acid costs from about 2½ to 10 cents per pound.

White Fly.

If your correspondent, W. L., does not care to take the risk of using hydrocyanic acid gas to kill the white fly, I can recommend this method: Give the tomatoes a thorough fumigating with tobacco dust, or some of the tobacco papers, some cool evening. In the morning spray the plants with a mixture of one-half pint of Scalecide to twelve gallons of cold water. Care must be taken to have the spray hit the under side of all the leaves and it will kill instantly any fly or egg it touches. I have within the last week tried this remedy and found it satisfactory. It was recommended to me by James Kinsella, gardener to Francis Skinner, Dedham, Mass.

The fumigating will probably cause a number of flies to fall onto the beds or benches, but wherever a fly is seen give it a bath and that will be the last of it. I dipped fuchsias, hydrangeas, pelargoniums, tomatoes and many other plants and, with the strength of the mixture as given, nothing was harmed. Better results are to be had from dipping than from spraying, where it is possible to do it. If W. L. tries this method, will he please report the result?

A White Fly Destroyer.

I have been much interested in reading the answers to correspondents in the REVIEW. White fly is a name that I shall not soon forget. In some sections here, in Florida, the orange groves have been badly injured by it.

Only a few days ago I saw an advertisement of a white fly destroyer called the Target Brand. I got some and used it in my greenhouse, on salvias, ageratum, etc. It knocked out the fly, but burned some of the tender foliage. I think it is worthy of some careful experiments, and I should like to see such experiments reported in the REVIEW. The Target Brand White Fly Destroyer is made by the American Horticultural Distributing Co., Martinsburg, W. Va., and is furnished at the following prices: One gallon, 75 cents; five gallons, $3.50; ten gallons, $7. It is to be mixed with water in the proportion of one gallon of the destroyer to thirty or forty gallons of water.

POINSETTIAS.

You should have your old plants of poinsettia, that have been resting since New Year's, out from under the bench. Shake off all the old soil, shorten back the stem only when or where it is still green or decayed and repot in a size smaller. Start growing in a temperature of 60 degrees, with frequent syringings. They will soon start and break into new growth, which will give you plenty of material for cuttings. Although May, or even April, is the right time to start, yet there is plenty of time for cuttings, for the very early struck cuttings become quite tall and often much pot-bound and then lose their foliage. Those propagated in July make fine plants, either for pots or planting out for cutting, and as late as August and even September will do well for pans. Last Christmas it was found that the single plant in a 5-inch or 6-inch pot is no longer the thing. Nearly everyone wanted a pan with from five to eight low plants.

THE AMLING PLANT.

One of the greenhouse centers west of Chicago is Maywood. It is a town of about 5,000 people and has a larger proportion of florists than almost any community of similar size in the west. There are eight or nine growers there, five of them right in one neighborhood west of town that is locally known as Sweetpeaville. The largest of these five growers is Albert F. Amling, whose establishment is shown in the foreground of the accompanying illustration. Back of the Amling range can be seen the places of Hugo Luedtke and Henry Wehrman. Just out of range of the camera is the glass of Wm. Collatz and H. Wietendahl.

Mr. Amling is perhaps best known as a grower of green goods but, while he makes asparagus and smilax a specialty, it is by no means to the exclusion of other profitable items. He has a range of approximately 80,000 feet of glass. There are eight high houses devoted to the climbing greens. These are shown at the right of the picture of the greenhouse plant. Mr. Amling was one of the first in the west to build special houses and go extensively into the production of greens. He has made a pronounced success of it. It is due as much to his enterprise as to that of any other grower in the west that the Chicago market can supply green goods any day in the year. He has made it a studied policy to have stock at all times, but he does not sell direct, all his crop being sold on consignment by his brother in Chicago.

Next to the high houses for greens in the picture are two wide houses in which Brides and Maids were grown up to last season, but these now are planted to Kaiserins, which had been a summer specialty with Mr. Amling, the three houses next on the left having been devoted to them for a number of seasons. The house on the left is a chrysanthemum house, used for miscellaneous purposes after the chrysanthemums are cut. Sweet peas are grown for an early crop and with these Mr. Amling has been notably successful. Lilies also are grown in considerable quantity.

Albert F. Amling is the eldest of four brothers. He was born at Maywood, December 17, forty-two years ago. It was in 1888 that the start was made in the greenhouse business, the firm being Albert F. Amling and E. C. Amling. Their father loaned them the money with which to start. They built three houses 22x100, planting two of them with roses and one with carnations. The next season three more similar houses were built and the place fixed up in first-class shape. The result of their efforts was that in six years they had made, besides a living for the two families, enough money to reimburse their father for his loan and to have the place, including the real estate, entirely free from debt.

In the next year the brothers separated, Albert F. Amling continuing the growing end and E. C. Amling starting in the commission business in Chicago. Since that time Albert Amling has entirely rebuilt the place and added to it. He is a careful grower and a student of his business, with the result that he has had uninterrupted success and has become a leading citizen of Maywood, with a number of outside interests. He is now vice-president of the Maywood State Bank.

It is reported that another of the Amling brothers is to build a range of greenhouses next spring, on property recently acquired at Maywood.

WINDOW-BOXES.

Window-boxes need drainage boxes only when there is fear of damage by drippings. The best soil for window gardens, and, in fact, the best in general, consists of three parts good garden soil and old barn fertilizer with some sharp sand for the fourth part. The boxes may be made of pine, sometimes lined with zinc, galvanized iron, or most durable of all, cypress. Paint the boxes the same color as the house, or a dark green. Erect plants should be used for the back and center rows, with drooping or trailing plants falling over the front—the greatest beauty of this style of gardening. For the back and center rows, where not shaded too much, the geranium is the most showy and popular of flowering plants, the doubles being preferred, as they stand the weather best. Dwarf cannas, petunias, dwarf palms, abutilons, and others that any florist will know, are part of the many that may be named for that purpose. For the outer row, or border, use variegated vincas, Boston fern, trailing abutilon, nasturtiums, English ivy, and so forth. In filling the wider veranda-boxes there may be three rows of plants, the tallest in the center and vines and shorter plants at each side. When there is much shade, fuchsias, begonias, and others of like habit may be used, also in any box place lemon verbenas and mignonette for their fragrance.

W. A. HARKETT.

A PERENNIAL BORDER.

F. J. Rea, in his talk before the Gardeners' and Florists' Club of Boston, May 21, said that his idea of a proper herbaceous garden was a broad, winding path, with wide borders on each side, having shrubs in the background, with occasional ones brought forward. For a back row some of the most desirable tuberosa, sweet williams, Spiraea Filipendula, Campanula persicifolia Moorheimeri, Coreopsis grandiflora, Lychnis, Oenothera Youngii, polemonium, and Delphinium Chinensis.

For a front row the following are good: Dianthus or moss pinks in quantity, Heuchera sanguinea, Iberis sempervirens, armeria, alyssum, Campanula Carpatia, Lychnis viscaria, Veronica gentianoides, Viola cornuta and Iris pumila.

The speaker preferred planting ten to twenty plants in a mass, rather than individual plants. He did not approve of the use of annuals in the herbaceous garden.

The Market.

The close approach of Memorial day has given a strong tone to the market the last few days and everything coming in is cleared out in short order. Prices have advanced somewhat on carnations, but not so much on roses, except bright colored varieties. There promises to be a large supply of both these flowers. Sweet peas promise to be on hand in quantity, and stocks, antirrhinums, double feverfew and candy-tuft are all quite plentiful and of excel-

Quite a few beds planted prior to May 25 were frozen on that morning, while market gardeners had many tomatoes and other tender vegetables destroyed at the same time. Bedding out will be nearly two weeks late from present appearances.

Club Jottings.

The White Killarney rose shown at the last club meeting by Waban Conservatories was highly thought of and should prove popular when propagated in quantity and disseminated.

The fine vases of the lovely pink Daphne cneorum shown at the club meeting by President Westwood showed that this plant thrives well at Forest Hills cemetery. Mr. Westwood propagates in August, in a hotbed, whenever good cuttings can be had.

W. H. Elliott's remarks on carrying over Richmond rose were interesting. His plants were flowered until July, cut down to eight or ten inches, removing similar in habit. George Stewart, of Medford, was the raiser of this useful novelty, which should prove valuable commercially and was awarded a silver medal. Robert Cameron received honorable mention for a nicely flowered plant of the pretty Cereus speciosus. W. N. Craig received a certificate of merit for a collection of Darwin and other late-flowering tulips.

The rhododendron show, already postponed until June 8, has been further postponed, owing to the abnormally late season, to June 15 and 16, and the annual peony show will be held on the same dates. The rose and strawberry show and exhibition of late peonies will come on June 22 and 23.

All Saturday exhibitions this season will be opened on Sunday afternoons also. This and the opening of the society's library should prove an attraction for many flower lovers.

Various Notes.

Peirce Bros., of Waltham, have their usual large supply of Spiraea Japonica for Memorial day and expect to cut 100,000 sprays.

Thomas Pegler marketed his last double violets May 24. As he started to pick September 29, he has had an unusually long season.

Many of Peter Fisher's friends fail to recognize him these days. The removal of a little hirsute adornment makes a mighty change in some men's faces.

J. Tailby & Sons' Spanish iris have been unusually fine this season. This beautiful bulb seems to be slowly but surely gaining in favor.

Seed merchants continue unusually busy for so late in the season. Nurserymen are still shipping even deciduous trees and shrubs, which in some cases have started but little. It has been a splendid planting season and bulbous and other spring flowers never lasted so well.

William Nicholson, as usual, has a big lot of double feverfew for Memorial day, also quantities of marguerites and unusually good carnations for the end of May.

The rock garden at Harvard Botanic Gardens is unusually attractive at present. Mr. Cameron has everything thoroughly up-to-date in these interesting gardens.

Mann Bros. are selling large quantities of bedding plants these days. Their crop of cut flowers for Memorial day is also the best they ever had.

COLD STORAGE VALLEY.

At least one of the Hamburg exporting firms puts up retarded crowns of lily of the valley in as small a quantity as 1,000 per case, and these are delivered weekly, fortnightly or as may be required, anywhere in Europe. Owing to their promptness in handling retarded crowns, and the care with which they are packed, hardly any are spoiled through thawing too rapidly in transit, except, perhaps in the hottest part of summer, or when the boat gets delayed in crossing from Hamburg to England, and in these cases the firm always makes good any losses. Under these circumstances it may readily be credited that the forcing of valley is on the rapid increase among the small growers throughout Europe.

Even the early tulips and narcissi north of Boston are still in first-class condition and there will be more bulbous stock for Memorial day than for years. Narcissus poeticus is just at its best, while late flowering tulips are fine. Lilac is not well open, being over two weeks later than in 1906. There is a good supply of Spiraea Japonica, but that popular shrub for Memorial day use, Spiraea Van Houttei, is late. At Horticultural hall May 25, T. D. Hatfield, gardener to Walter Hunnewell, showed six plants of a new hybrid calceolaria, the results of a cross between C. rugosa and one of the yellow herbaceous varieties. Flowers are more than double the size of those produced by C. rugosa Golden Gem, and of the same deep golden yellow color, the plant being the way home to Fishkill, N. Y., from the Washington convention. The railroad sent them astray, but they were recovered after a month of search.

COLD STORAGE VALLEY.

At least one of the Hamburg exporting firms puts up retarded crowns of lily of the valley in as small a quantity as 1,000 per case, and these are delivered weekly, fortnightly or as may be required, anywhere in Europe. Owing to their promptness in handling retarded crowns, and the care with which they are packed, hardly any are spoiled through thawing too rapidly in transit, except perhaps in the hottest part of summer, or when the boat gets delayed in crossing from Hamburg to England, and in these cases the firm always makes good any losses. Under these circumstances it may readily be credited that the forcing of valley is on the rapid increase among the small growers throughout Europe.

THERE is one branch of lily of the valley growing which, in the opinion of many, is capable of considerable expansion, and that is the pot trade for room and decorative purposes. When well grown, with good foliage, there is no better subject to make an attractive pot plant. This trade is not catered for in half sufficient quantities.

THE DEATH ROLL.

T. W. Guy.

T. W. Guy, who was years ago a member of the old firm of North & Gay, in St. Louis, died recently at St. James, Mo., at the age of 76, and was buried Sunday, May 26. Mr. Guy was at one time a prominent member of the St. Louis Florists' Club and had many friends in the trade.

VALUE OF ADVERTISING.

In considering the value of such publicity work as that which has been done by the National Council of Horticulture and as is contemplated in its local field by the Chicago Florists' Club, it is interesting to note what has been the effect of such efforts in the past. For instance, a few years ago it was not thought possible to use colored flowers for funeral purposes. It is a matter of comparatively recent history that Bassett & Washburn were advocating in all possible ways the use of American Beauties for funeral purposes. No one then ever thought of such a thing. Now the bunch of Beauties nearly always is accorded a most conspicuous place at every funeral. There is nothing more popular. This has been the outcome of a comparatively small amount of publicity work and it is an example of what easily may be done in other directions.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The week opened with a big rush of local business and a fair amount of shipping. On Tuesday, at the hour of greatest activity in the dispatching of Memorial day shipments, it looks as though all previous Memorial day records have been passed, especially in the money value of sales, for prices are strong and every house in the market seems to have all that it can do. The supplies of stock are large, although on many items there is a shortage as compared with last year. This is especially true of peonies, which are in great demand.

The supplies of roses are large and seem possibly larger than the actuality, because of the fact that buyers seem to prefer other flowers. The week has brought in heavy receipts of carnations, many of which give evidence of having been held back, but orders for carnations are something phenomenal and all salable carnations are in demand. For a week the wholesalers have been commenting on the size of the carnation orders. Buyers who in other seasons have taken 500 carnations are this year taking 1,000, 2,000 or even 3,000. Single orders for 5,000 carnations are numerous. There is no possibility of filling them all in full and as a result carnation prices are strong for anything except sleepy flowers, and these, as usual, are worthless.

Because of the unusual weather conditions, the quality of almost all the stock in the market is lower than usual. The roses have improved materially in the last few days, but carnations are soft and it is anticipated that there will be much complaint after Memorial day. It is unfortunate that, at the time of greatest demand, qualities should be so low. The wholesalers are absolutely powerless in the matter. They cannot send out better stock than conditions afford.

There is a large demand for peonies. The crop is much less than usual and quality is hardly up to standard. Every day there comes report of further injury to the peony fields. The outdoor flower in greatest evidence is cape jasmine from the south. The sale on shipping orders is not as large as it was some years ago, for nowadays the Texas shippers are canvassing the trade and making shipments direct. There was a time when any Decoration day order which could not be filled in full with the flowers ordered could be pieced out with jasmines. These no longer go as a substitute. Some fair lilac is seen.

There is a good supply of lilies, and of sweet peas and of the smaller flowers, such as daisies, pansies, etc., there is an abundance. Some fine Parrott tulips are coming in, but are being picked up by the local retailers. Many fine ten weeks' stocks in several colors are on hand but are slow sale.

The local buying for Decoration day will be on Wednesday, for in the rush of shipping local business is pushed to one side. The retailers expect to do a big business Thursday morning.

A great deal of boxwood has gone out in the last week and, as usual, Decoration day calls for large quantities of ferns. Good ferns are scarce, except the new stock from the south, and this the buyers do not want so long as the cold storage supplies hold out.

Get Coliseum.

There is an old saying that "it is always darkest just before dawn," and so it was in flower show matters.

A week ago, because of the lack of interest in a September exhibition, it appeared that Chicago would have no flower show this year, but on May 23 it was announced that the horse show people had abandoned their annual exhibition and that the horse show week at the Coliseum was open. At a meeting of the executive committee of the Horticultural Society May 24 it was decided to proceed with the annual autumn exhibition in the Coliseum. The date is the week of October 31 to November 6. Committees were appointed to begin immediate preparation and a premium list shortly will be issued.

The dates selected are for a show opening Thursday and running until the following Wednesday night.

The Building Boom.

The John C. Moninger Co. supplies additional evidence of the big boom that is going on all through the country in the matter of building greenhouses. They have figured up the amount of business done to April 30 of this year and find that they had at that date shipped material for houses, to be built according to their plans, aggregating 634,292 square feet. In addition they had furnished material for 204,875 square feet where no plans were furnished. In the list was one house 120x600, which they believe to be the largest greenhouse in the world. This was for W. H. Weinschenk, at New Castle, Pa.

West Parks.

The west parks are spending a great deal of money this season in landscape and gardening work, as well as in the erection of the big conservatory and range of plant houses at Garfield park.

At Humboldt park the largest rose garden in the west has been planted this spring. There are from 8,000 to 10,000 plants and the season has been most favorable for giving them a good start. Between the roses, gladiolus bulbs have been set, and adjoining the rose garden are large plantations of perennials.

At Garfield park a big flower garden is being prepared for early planting. One of the many beds will require 5,000 geraniums of one variety.

Various Notes.

The Poehlmann Bros. Co. is operating two soil crushers built after the pattern of the one invented by A. H. Budlong. They say each crusher does the work of twenty men and that the machines easily have paid for themselves in the first season's use.

A. L. Randall says he is more than pleased with the way the cut flower business has been going since the first of the year. He says the last part of 1906 was a little slow, but that the activity in 1907 has put them well to the good. The supply department also is making steady progress.

Vaughan & Sperry call attention to the fact that practically all their large supply of peonies this season will come from growers who have not previously shipped cut flowers to the Chicago market. In a normal season there would be no chance of any scarcity of peonies in this market.

C. M. Dickinson, of Hunt's, reports that within the last few days they have delivered ten-gallon casks of To-bak-ine liquid to John Muno, Bassett & Washburn and J. A. Budlong, and that they have orders for early delivery of similar casks for several other large local growers. These casks, representing a value of considerably over $100 each, are supplied with locked faucets.

An attractive display in one of John Mangel's windows last week was made with cut sprays of bougainvillea.

Leonard Kill and wife expect to spend next week at West Baden.

E. C. Amling reports that he received an order for Decoration day peonies from a retailer in Rhode Island.

The Atlas Floral Co. has equipped its show windows on both sides of the store with cases separating the window from the store, in the fashion now employed by all the retailers who carry large stocks of flowers in the windows.

H. R. Hughes, on West Van Buren street, has an attractive Memorial day window, a cemetery scene, which attracts an unusual amount of comment among passers-by and has brought him a great deal of Decoration day business.

C. W. McKellar has this week received many thousands of outdoor irises, which bring what should be a quite satisfactory return.

E. F. Winterson states that he has made arrangements whereby the E. F. Winterson Co. will receive a shipment of 50,000 new ferns each day as long as the present active demand requires. They also have in a big shipment of boxwood, which has become one of the best selling greens in this market. August Schaefer, a brother-in-law of Mr. Winterson, is now associated with the firm, having charge of the office.

George Reinberg cut the first orchids from his new stock last week. In the course of another fortnight the regular supply will begin.

O. P. Bassett and Mrs. Bassett have reached New York on their way home from Europe and will be in Chicago in a few days.

One of the week's visitors was Mrs.

James Lister, of Newton, Ia. A couple of years ago she rented her place to C. W. Anderson, but thinks of again entering the business.

Peter Reinberg had a nice cut of the Mrs. Marshall Field rose for Memorial day. As previously reported, the books show this rose to have been the most profitable of any on the place this season.

August Jurgens thinks he sees signs of a recession in the flower business, but the wholesalers tell him he always feels the same way in the spring of the year, when the outdoor valley is competing with the indoor crop.

John Zech, of Zech & Mann, says he had anticipated having abundant supplies of white carnations for the Decoration day demand, but the orders were so large the receipts were quickly taken up.

Wietor Bros. report that they will shortly begin to cut from their first planted Beauties. They always see to it that a few houses are planted to come into crop for June.

L. Coatsworth, who has been down to New Castle, says that everything is in good shape there and that the young Beauties planted to take the place of Richmond are looking fine.

John Kruchten says that at last reports his grower of peonies found their plants had suffered little if any injury from the cold weather.

Weiland & Risch already have planted a good part of their Killarney for next season.

Last week's rains were especially welcome to the growers who have carnation plants in the field. They served to give them quite a good start.

The E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind., is sending among other stock consigned to E. H. Hunt cut fronds of Nephrolepis Piersoni, which the retailers find useful.

Arthur Bryant, the pioneer nurseryman and large grower of peonies, at Princeton, Ill., whose obituary was published exclusively in last week's REVIEW, has shipped cut blooms of peonies to the Kennicott Bros. Co. each spring for many years.

The George Wittbold Co. reports that with the approach of Memorial day outdoor work took a great impetus and that their large facilities for this class of work now are taxed to the utmost.

E. T. Wanzer, at Wheaton, is making some substantial additions to his place. A new office and workroom are being added to the east end and a storage room for coal underneath the new room.

Johnson & Chronis, at Lake avenue and Forty-seventh street, have increased their facilities by the erection of three houses 20x50.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Reports of the cut flower market are still unsatisfactory, little going on except funeral work. The wholesale houses have been loaded down with cut stock of all kinds and the retailers can get any amount of good stock at low prices. A few good orders were placed in advance for Decoration day. A number of good sized June weddings are booked for next week. Among the plantsmen everything looks busy, as they at last got seasonable weather to plant out their many orders.

There are plenty of roses of all kinds to be had, but it is hard to find extra fancy quality. The bulk of the stock is showing the effects of the warm weather and is badly mildewed.

Carnations are of much better quality, with prices low in thousand lots. Enchantress, Lady Bountiful, Lawson and Cardinal are especially fine. Many of these went to waste last week for want of demand.

Sweet peas are coming in plentifully and will soon be a glut on the market. The lighter shades are in better favor than the other colors.

There is plenty of good valley to be had, also cape jasmine and peonies. Fancy ferns are still scarce and the common dagger fern is now in use for design work. There is plenty of other greens except bronze galax.

Various Notes.

Mr. Scheidegger, who is running the old Pilcher plant at Kirkwood, was married last week.

A. Berdan, one of the oldest florists in Kirkwood, is still enjoying the best of health and is sending to this market a fine lot of lily of the valley, of which he makes a specialty.

A. J. Bentzen, of the Bentzen Floral Co., says they are up to their necks in planting out, but with favorable weather they will be able to finish up by June 10.

Adolph Brix reports that his new houses will be finished this week. They were built by Robert Thompson, of this city, and he is much pleased with the work.

Henry Braun has moved his family to Kirkwood, where he will reside. He is not at present following the florists' business, but he can't keep out long. Once a florist, always a florist. Time will tell.

E. W. Guy and wife, of Belleville, Ill., passed through here on Friday evening on their way to St. James, Mo., to attend the funeral of his father, T. W. Guy, an old and respected florist, aged 76 years, who was formerly located at Kimmswick, Mo., and who belonged years ago to the old firm of North & Guy, located at 614 Olive street, next door to the old Jordan Floral Co. Mr. Guy was at one time a prominent member of the St. Louis Florists' Club and no one had more friends than he in the trade, who are with me in extending to the bereaved family our sympathy. The funeral took place Sunday afternoon,

The Mullanphy Floral Co., Grand avenue, is making a fine showing of bedding plants and reports business brisk in this line.

John J. Burke had a busy week in funeral work, which required an extra force of help. He says this kind of work pays best, especially when stock is so plentiful and cheap.

Mrs. M. M. Ayers furnished a charity church decoration. All the wholesalers donated cut stock.

William C. Young, state vice-president of the S. A. F., reports that he would like to hear as soon as possible from all florists who have any intention of attending the convention. He will attend the next Florists' Club meeting, June 13.

The executive committee of the St. Louis Horticultural Society held a meeting last week, at the Washington hotel, to talk over show matters. They are at present interested in the raising of a $1,000 subscription toward the new coliseum, in which they expect to hold the fall show, should it be completed in time. The preliminary lists have already been mailed out.

TWIN CITIES.

The Market.

The weather had more to do with business last week than anything else. One day we would have warm, bright weather and the following day it would be so cold that it would blast all hopes of a good trade. Stock has nevertheless come along nicely and apparently there has not been an oversupply on anything. Some specimen blooms, especially of Chatenay, are on the market and retail readily at $2.50 and $3 per dozen. Richmond is also at its best and selects sell at the same figure as special Chatenay. Bride, Maid and Golden Gate follow along at $1.50 per dozen. The disagreeable weather has prevented the street dealer from doing much business; consequently carnations still retail at 75 cents and $1 per dozen. Spring flowers are slow in coming in. A few early varieties of tulips are reported as slow sale. Valley remains at 75 cents a dozen, with a light demand. Cape jasmine is helping out wonderfully in funeral work, but for a cut-flower sale does not appear to be desirable. Giganteum lilies are abundant. Decoration day business has opened. Country orders are especially heavy, but city orders appear to be light.

St. Paul.

L. L. May & Co. have had considerable funeral work. One piece that was especially attractive was a design of an American express card which was worked out in detail to fine effect. They also turned out other handsome odd effects in funeral work. Spring trade they report the heaviest in a great many years.

A. W. Lemke reports a satisfactory trade and a heavy demand for bedding stock.

E. F. Lemke has a fine lot of giganteum lilies, also some large hydrangeas. He reports business as being excellent.

C. F. Vogt has done considerable in shrubs this spring. He reports orders for bedding plants and vases as being satisfactory.

Holm & Olson are handling considerable nursery stock. The cut flower business is fair.

Minneapolis.

The Minneapolis Floral Co. has booked orders for enormous quantities of bedding stock and is afraid its stock will not last over Decoration day.

Donaldson's department store continues to sell large numbers of carnations daily. The company's own greenhouses cannot begin to supply the demand.

Amundson & Kerschner are doing a nice business.

LENOX, MASS.

The regular meeting of the Lenox Horticultural Society was held May 18, President Heeremans in the chair. In order to arouse a more lively interest in the society, among the assistant gardeners and others, it was unanimously voted to reduce the initiation fee as much as possible. It is expected that this will result in a considerable increase in membership, as many have expressed a desire to affiliate. The cooperation of all those having the interests of the society and the profession at heart is cordially invited by the officers and members. Several questions taken from the question box created lively discussion. Among the most interesting and instructive were, "What causes hot water to circulate in pipes?" and "Does a moist atmosphere prevent red spider?" Judging from the discussion that followed, there would seem to be a large majority of the opinion that a moist atmosphere alone does not prevent red spider. Two fine vases of Gladiolus Peach Blossom and Blushing Bride were exhibited by S. Carlquist, for which he was awarded a certificate of merit. G. H. I.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The dark, cool weather has created unusual market conditions on the eve of Memorial day. Frequent showers spoiled much of the outdoor stock until the last moment, the market being largely dependent on indoor and southern flowers, with a sprinkling of eastern bulbous stock. The shipping demand is heavy. The local demand, due as much to the horse show entertainments as to the holiday, is brisk. Prices have become firmer, with slight advances here and there. Peonies, both southern and a few locally grown, are bringing higher average prices than ever before at this season. Carnations are not plentiful; colored varieties are much scarcer than white. Roses are selling well. Even the poorer grades, when of fair quality with clean foliage, are in demand. Iris is plentiful. Much of the cheaper greens is being consumed.

A Wholesaler's View.

One of our brightest wholesale florists expresses his surprise at the number of good growers who let their stock go down hill during May. He admits that most of the flowers bring very little return, but contends that good flowers bring more than poor flowers during times of overproduction and that from now on good stock will bring paying prices. The wholesaler referred especially to tea roses, which are in many cases poor and badly mildewed, but what he said applies to all varieties of stock. There is no question as to the truth of this statement. It would pay, and pay well, to keep all plants in condition until the day they are thrown out. The difficulty lies in the excess of work which comes in the spring, the trying weather conditions, and the weakened vitality of many of the plants. The impression created by a study of the market is that to grow poor flowers is a very bad business, indeed.

A Good Example.

One of our most successful business men, who has just had his own window-boxes filled, writes Phil urging the importance to all florists of beautifying their places of business. Time and material spent in this way is money well spent, that will yield interest, educating the public to admire and love plants and flowers, a love that will in time create the desire to have some flowers of their own. Every one of us should do something to foster this love. It may be by prettily filled window-boxes, effective beds, neatly trimmed grass and hedges, a well-arranged shop window or conservatory, or a clean, orderly greenhouse. All these things help. Won't you do your share?

Various Notes.

Antoine Wintzer, vice-president and manager of the Conard & Jones Co., West Grove, Pa., will speak at the Florists' Club meeting in Horticultural hall, Tuesday, June 4, at 8 p. m., subject "The Deterioration of Forcing Roses, the Cause, the Remedy."

A. Farenwald, of Hillside, Pa., has received $3,750, or 46 cents a plant, for 8,000 Richmond roses frozen February 4. He is now replanting the rebuilt range.

W. Atlee Burpee sails for Europe Saturday, June 1, to be absent three months.

M. Rice and Mrs. Rice are expected to arrive in New York next Saturday.

Fred Ehret's store is the garden spot of Fairmount avenue. A conservatory in the rear adds to its charm.

Edwin Lonsdale has the beds at Girard college filled in beautiful array. A ribbon border of the early blue Phlox divaricata is very effective.

Julius Kohler & Son, of Frankford, are sending in some very well flowered spiraea.

A. Harvey & Sons, Brandywine Summit, received $750 worth of roofing material, posts and gutters for a new house 29x105, as well as the labor of rebuilding a house broken by snow February 4. The section is now yielding a good crop of tomatoes.

A new coalition, to be styled the Trust Busters' Association, is said to be in its incipient stages.

The Leo Niessen Co. has 25,000 peonies for Decoration day. Poeticus and dagger ferns grown 1,200 miles apart attest its enterprise.

GLEN COVE, N. Y.

The Nassau County Horticultural Society held its regular monthly meeting at the usual time and place. There was a good attendance, with President Mackenzie in the chair. Four new members were elected and two applications for membership were received. There was a good display of flowers at the exhibit. Exhibitors: A. Mackenzie, Valentine Cleres, H. Matz, Felix Mense and J. O'Brien. Judges: Messrs. Harrison, Ashworth and Everett. Special premiums received: For fall show, from Mrs. Dana, $20 in books; Rickards Bros., $10; W. H. Brown, $5. One dollar was offered by B. Davis for one best rose at the June meeting.

A committee was appointed to express the sympathy of the society to the bereaved family of John Bingham, deceased. The society will feel the loss of Mr. Bingham very much.

Secretary J. F. Johnson read a most interesting essay on "The Best Time to Plant Evergreens." It was well discussed by several members and proved very instructive.

James Holloway presented the society with a handsome ballot box. H. Matz exhibited a splendid white seedling carnation. J. W. E.

ALLEGHENY, PA.—While Mr. and Mrs. Julius Ludwig were out walking Sunday, May 12, they were attracted by the strains of a brass band, and on tracing the music to its source they found themselves at the home of Herman Hein, who was celebrating his thirty-fourth birthday in old German style and gave them a cordial welcome to share in the merry-making.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

The steady cool weather we are experiencing has handicapped business somewhat. The mercury last week reached 50 degrees, with rain. This kind of weather at this time of the year is unusual and many times the question is asked by the customer, "Can I plant this now?" No doubt in one way this unseasonable weather is helping the florists, as the first-class trade generally leaves the city for the summer months, and as soon as the hot spell arrives society will say good-by and there will be a sudden fall off in the cut flower line.

The pot plants are taken home and planted in the cold ground and nearly all look any way but encouraging. Many times the florists are discouraged by the complaints. The nurserymen had a fair season, but what was planted has made little headway. Millions of buds are ready to break forth at the first few true old time summer days. Many veterans' Memorial day was no doubt a disappointment, as a great many depend on the home garden for blooms.

The indoor blooms are plentiful, such as roses and carnations. Our growers offered extra carnations at 50 cents a dozen, while the street boys sold theirs for 25 cents a dozen and roses at 35 cents. Sweet peas are plentiful. Lily of the valley is short in supply. Bulbous stock is drifting away fast and decorative plants are little more plentiful. Greens of all kinds are enough to meet the demands. The seed counter trade has dropped off and night work is over.

Various Notes.

Isaac H. Moss, of Govanstown, has installed a two horse-power gasoline engine for pumping manure water in his new rose houses.

F. G. Burger is making improvements at his store. The painters are doing everything to make it look like new. The well-kept lawn adds to its beauty.

The Market.

At last the warm days have come, and, we hope, to stay. In all lines planting is actively going on, especially in bedding plants. In fact, from now until at least the middle of June it will be rush all the time; everybody, having waited for the warm weather, now wants the work done at once. The same old story. Our florists for the last fortnight have had an unusually good volume of orders, and for this we can thank the cold spring. Again, there have been many funerals lately, which have materially helped.

The outlook for Memorial day is very bright, although all outdoor stock will be in very short supply here; but as roses and carnations are now in abundant volume to meet all demands, the craft feel quite sure that the usual profitable holiday business will be done. Every year the Memorial day trade increases, but the customers all want large bunches of flowers for their grave decorations, and with very little outdoor to carry the people to Buckeye lake next July. There will be games with prizes, lunch, baseball and a general good time. M. B. Faxon, for the seed committee, reported that already 3,000 children had been supplied with seeds and that the greatest enthusiasm is being shown in the gardening work. Our president told of some especially good work that the schools were doing.

At this meeting the last display of plants and flowers was made for the season, and the committee, consisting of Messrs. Reichert, Hills, Metzmaier, Buehler and Brust, awarded John Williams twenty points for a very excellently grown Bridesmaid rose in bloom. For Pandanus utilis fifteen points went to I. D. Siebert. Mrs. John Williams was given fifteen points, and also honorable mention, for a large Tarrytown fern. During the evening the ladies present carried on a musical program that was much enjoyed by all.

As our next meeting would naturally fall just before Memorial day, it was postponed to Monday evening, June 3, when, through the courtesy of the Fifth Avenue Floral Co., the club will meet at that firm's greenhouses.

Various Notes.

At one of our largest schools, the children, 800 in number, each contributed 3 cents, and with the proceeds there was purchased a California privet hedge, which has been set out and will be cared for by the scholars.

The Munk Floral Co. is advertising and making a leading specialty of pot-grown tomato plants.

The flower thieves are beginning their yearly operations; the thieves take the plants up by the roots, so they can be transplanted. Geraniums and coleus seem to be the favorite plunder. It is believed that these bedding plants are being again sold at the markets.

The board of commissioners appointed by the city some time ago, consisting of Austin W. Lord, of New York, chairman; C. Mulford Robinson, of Rochester, secretary; Albert Kelsey, of Philadelphia; C. M. Lowrie, of New York, and H. A. McNeil, of New York, are here this week formulating plans for the beautification of Columbus. The sum of $5,000 has been appropriated for this work.

Mrs. E. M. Krauss, in her new location at 109 South High street, has been so busy with regular trade and arranging for the rush of Memorial day that she has been obliged to keep open Sundays until noon.

The Columbus Floral Co. has in the first weeks of its new venture been receiving a liberal patronage, especially for plants. It expects fine business for Memorial day. ZERO.

WEST CHESTER, PA.—The damage done at Kift's greenhouses May 19 was much less than was expected, considering the amount of hail which fell. A visit to that place showed that not more than fifty panes of glass were broken. The firm has heavier glass in the houses than formerly, which probably saved the owners from more serious loss. At Mancill's and other greenhouses the damage was also slight. The storm seemed to be heavier in the northern portion of West Chester than in the southern section.

Still the east is in the grip of the unseasonable weather. May 26 contributed a cold rain, worthy of March. Vegetation is delayed, the early plantings of tender and half-hardy stock are largely destroyed, and there will be a big demand for replanting. The market gardeners of Long Island and Jersey also have their own troubles.

Decoration day promises an abundance of bloom of every kind and the wholesalers anticipate a large demand from out of town. Prices are reasonable and the commemoration universal.

Beauties, the best of them, could be bought for $10 a hundred Saturday, May 25, and the street merchants were utilized to dispose of the lower grades. Richmond, Killarney, Bride and Maid shared in the decline, and after the call of Memorial day is over still lower levels may be expected. Last year the lower rates began as early as the first part of May. Carnations are abundant and the quality shows no retrogression.

There will be plenty of orchids for the June weddings and plenty of weddings for all the up-to-date stores to attend to. Bookings have been most encouraging. Some of the decorations are to be carte blanche and elaborate.

Various Notes.

Wm. H. Donohoe's new store, at 17 East Twenty-eighth street, opens next Saturday and is almost ready. It is about four times the size of his present store, in a splendid location and is being fitted up with all modern conveniences.

The Rickards Bros., seedsmen, have enjoyed a wonderfully successful season. Frank Dugan, their superintendent, who has been with the Bridgeman store for many years, has just fallen heir to $50,000 windfall and will leave for Ireland early in the summer to gather it in.

Arthur T. Boddington has been ill at his home in Yonkers for a week. So strenuously and so long has the day and night work continued, it is a wonder all of the seedsmen and plantsmen are not down with nervous prostration.

F. W. O. Schmitz, of Prince Bay, has received his annual importation of cycas.

Already the big convention of the S. A. F. at Philadelphia, less than three months away, is a theme of interest and some of the big exhibitors are planning for an extensive showing. It is not often New Yorkers are afforded a national convention at their doors and the attendance from this city will be large, with the great exhibition only two hours away.

The New York Club's outing, July 2, promises to excel all its predecessors, with a guarantee fund of $550 to begin with. Nothing but a cyclone can detract from the attendance.

The Rose Hill Nurseries, at New Rochelle, announce the most satisfactory planting season in forty years' experience. The plantings have been numerous. Some large estates have been completely rejuvenated and shipments of evergreens continue daily.

O. V. Zangen reports the best season in his career.

H. H. Berger & Co. are comfortably

ensconced in their new store, at 70 Warren street, and much delighted with the change and their enlarged and improved facilities.

Anton Schultheis, of College Point, has an abundance of everything for Decoration day. His stock of boxwood is large and of superb quality. Some grand ramblers and Dorothy Perkins roses remain for this week's requirements.

James McManus says he will have a continuous supply of cattleyas for the summer. The sources of supply are steadily increasing.

A small fire at John Young's greenhouses, Bedford Station, was quickly subdued and no serious damage resulted.

Henry R. Crawbuck, of Brooklyn, is shipping daily fine dogwood and apple and cherry branches from his own nursery at Chatham, N. J.

Bonnet & Blake and W. H. Kuebler in Brooklyn are crowded for room and each firm has all the business it can handle.

H. E. Froment receives enough roses daily from the L. B. Coddington greenhouses alone to make an ordinary wholesale business.

Lord & Burnham Co. has just issued a unique line of circulars, sending one diminutive catalogue or reminder weekly for eight weeks, covering in that time every department of the greenhouse business and reaching every one of the 10,000 florists in the country. The firm is doing a tremendous business. Conservatories at country homes seem to be spreading to the uttermost parts of the continent. All the firms in this line of horticultural development report wonderful success and increase.

The new store of John King Duer is now an established success. H. H. Coan, the manager, reports results far ahead of expectations. Window decoration has been a specialty. The store and yard have unusual conveniences.

S. Masur in Brooklyn is now established in his new store, 238 Fulton street, next door to the old one, and has fitted it up in excellent style, with mirrors, ice-box and electrical effects, doing a fine trade among the Heights society people.

Uptown, on the corner of Fulton street and Greene avenue, Robert G. Wilson, with his new greenhouses in apple-pie order, has facilities for large decorations unequalled in the City of Churches.

Leikens continues his fine decorative work in the Belmont and anticipates a larger store on his return from Newport in the fall. With Mrs. Leikens he goes June 1 to the society city, where already his Newport establishment is one of the features of the season.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Still the east is in the grip of the unseasonable weather. May 26 contributed a cold rain, worthy of March. Vegetation is delayed, the early plantings of tender and half-hardy stock are largely destroyed, and there will be a big demand for replanting. The market gardeners of Long Island and Jersey also have their own troubles.

Decoration day promises an abundance of bloom of every kind and the wholesalers anticipate a large demand from out of town. Prices are reasonable and the commemoration universal.

Beauties, the best of them, could be bought for $10 a hundred Saturday, May 25, and the street merchants were utilized to dispose of the lower grades. Richmond, Killarney, Bride and Maid shared in the decline, and after the call of Memorial day is over still lower levels may be expected. Last year the lower rates began as early as the first part of May. Carnations are abundant and the quality shows no retrogression.

There will be plenty of orchids for the June weddings and plenty of weddings for all the up-to-date stores to attend to. Bookings have been most encouraging. Some of the decorations are to be carte blanche and elaborate.

Various Notes.

Wm. H. Donohoe's new store, at 17 East Twenty-eighth street, opens next Saturday and is almost ready. It is about four times the size of his present store, in a splendid location and is being fitted up with all modern conveniences.

The Rickards Bros., seedsmen, have enjoyed a wonderfully successful season. Frank Dugan, their superintendent, who has been with the Bridgeman store for many years, has just fallen heir to $50,000 windfall and will leave for Ireland early in the summer to gather it in.

Arthur T. Boddington has been ill at his home in Yonkers for a week. So strenuously and so long has the day and night work continued, it is a wonder all of the seedsmen and plantsmen are not down with nervous prostration.

F. W. O. Schmitz, of Prince Bay, has received his annual importation of cypas.

Already the big convention of the S. A. F. at Philadelphia, less than three months away, is a theme of interest and some of the big exhibitors are planning for an extensive showing. It is not often New Yorkers are afforded a national convention at their doors and the attendance from this city will be large, with the great exhibition only two hours away.

The New York Club's outing, July 2, promises to excel all its predecessors, with a guarantee fund of $550 to begin with. Nothing but a cyclone can detract from the attendance.

The Rose Hill Nurseries, at New Rochelle, announce the most satisfactory planting season in forty years' experience. The plantings have been numerous. Some large estates have been completely rejuvenated and shipments of evergreens continue daily.

O. V. Zaegen reports the best season in his career.

H. H. Berger & Co. are comfortably

ensconced in their new store, at 70 Warren street, and much delighted with the change and their enlarged and improved facilities.

Anton Schultheis, of College Point, has an abundance of everything for Decoration day. His stock of boxwood is large and of superb quality. Some grand ramblers and Dorothy Perkins roses remain for this week's requirements.

James McManus says he will have a continuous supply of cattleyas for the summer. The sources of supply are steadily increasing.

A small fire at John Young's greenhouses, Bedford Station, was quickly subdued and no serious damage resulted.

Henry R. Crawbuck, of Brooklyn, is shipping daily fine dogwood and apple and cherry branches from his own nursery at Chatham, N. J.

Bonnet & Blake and W. H. Kuebler in Brooklyn are crowded for room and each firm has all the business it can handle.

H. E. Froment receives enough roses daily from the L. B. Coddington greenhouses alone to make an ordinary wholesale business.

Lord & Burnham Co. has just issued a unique line of circulars, sending one diminutive catalogue or reminder weekly for eight weeks, covering in that time every department of the greenhouse business and reaching every one of the 10,000 florists in the country. The firm is doing a tremendous business. Conservatories at country homes seem to be spreading to the uttermost parts of the continent. All the firms in this line of horticultural development report wonderful success and increase.

The new store of John King Duer is now an established success. H. H. Coan, the manager, reports results far ahead of expectations. Window decoration has been a specialty. The store and yard have unusual conveniences.

S. Masur in Brooklyn is now established in his new store, 238 Fulton street, next door to the old one, and has fitted it up in excellent style, with mirrors, ice-box and electrical effects, doing a fine trade among the Heights society people.

Uptown, on the corner of Fulton street and Greene avenue, Robert G. Wilson, with his new greenhouses in apple-pie order, has facilities for large decorations unequalled in the City of Churches.

Alexander McConnell keeps his store at the Windsor arcade, on Fifth avenue,

New York, splendidly decorated from his own greenhouses at New Rochelle and is shipping from his nurseries there large quantities of specimen evergreens to many of the big estates in his vicinity. There seems to be no end to the demand this spring and the cool weather still makes shipping safe and satisfactory.

David Clarke's Sons are overwhelmed with June bookings and report the wedding crop immense. Every week has had its share of decorations, but the coming month will break all records of this half-a-century-old establishment.

With A. Warendorff every day sees an artistic change in window display. Roses were so reasonable that the dollar boxes were made a feature and with the usual result; he couldn't make them up fast enough for the transient demand.

With good weather Decoration day will be a banner day for the retail florists of New York.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

THE CYPRESS MARKET.

From the Louisiana cypress mills come reports of badly broken stocks, dry stock being placed in this category with especial emphasis. The demand is reported good and the buying movement well distributed over the country. Water shipments are being arranged for whenever possible and the movement of cypress lumber to Atlantic ports by coastwise steamers has noticeably increased. One New Orleans concern is making an organized effort to stimulate the export trade by placing two representatives in the British isles.

Prices show firmness. The mills continue badly oversold and the demand is in excess of the supply on many items. While demand and prices are entirely satisfactory from the standpoint of the manufacturers, the car shortage in the cypress country is causing shipments to drag badly. Some improvement in the car supply is reported, but the situation is still bad.

SOIL FOR BEGONIAS.

What soil is best suited for begonias?
F. B. F.

Begonias of all kinds prefer a light but moderately rich compost, one-half loam, one-fourth each old, dried manure and leaf-mold. They do not need to be potted firmly, like hardwooded plants or even geraniums, preferring the soil a trifle loose, especially the tuberous rooted section.

PAINESVILLE, O.—Miss Katie Werner, daughter of William Werner, and Clarence E. Myers were married May 20.

COLUMBUS, O.—Owing to the delay in the delivery of the structural steel for the new greenhouses of the Fifth Avenue Floral Co., the new houses of the company are not progressing as their owners hoped would be the case. The company is erecting two new greenhouses of steel and glass, each 27x400 feet, on its new site on West Fifth avenue. The four old greenhouses will be removed to the new location and will be widened to twenty-seven feet. Placed end to end they will make another house 400 feet long, so the company will this fall have three greenhouses of this size. Work at the new location is being pushed as fast as possible and it will not be long until all the structures are completed if material can be secured.

BORER ON DAHLIAS.

Will you kindly tell me how to get rid of the pest that is troubling my dahlias every summer? It looks like a caterpillar. It enters the stem and eats its way up through it.

T. T.

I regret my inability to suggest any practical remedy for the pest named. I personally have had no experience with it, but there is no way of combating it other than cutting off and burning the affected shoots. The tarnished plant bug is often destructive, and by piercing the shoots it sucks out the sap and causes blasted buds and one-sided shoots. No remedy is effectual for this pest, either, so far as we are aware. Dahlias are usually free from pests, but the two named make successful culture of this popular autumn flower difficult. Perhaps some other reader of the REVIEW may be able to suggest some remedy for the two pests in question.

last that will be heard of it. A hearing was to have been held May 22, but some of the big seed people got busy and took the short route."

C. E. KENDEL, secretary of the American Seed Trade Association, reports that special railroad rates to the New York convention were asked for, but refused on account of the regular low rates that prevail in many eastern states. Rates may, however, be secured in connection with the Jamestown exposition.

CALIFORNIA CONDITIONS.

Writing under date of May 22, Lester L. Morse, of C. C. Morse & Co., San Francisco, said:

"Crops present a rather better appearance since they have been hoed, but the prospects are not at all encouraging. Many of our crops were planted very late and the lands have become very hard and dry. Onions are suffering considerably from mildew blight; there is no question but what the crop will be light."

PLOWS MELON LAND BY STEAM

Word comes from Manzanola, Colo., that for a week prior to May 16 D. V. Burrell, of Rocky Ford, had a monster steam plow breaking ground on the virgin prairies about two miles north and a little east of Manzanola. This land is now under a canal that was run through that section of the country last summer. Mr. Burrell will cultivate 3,000 acres, planting all in cantaloupe for the seeds. This part of the valley seems to be particularly well adapted to raising melons for seed. The soil has the right proportions of sand and other properties for forming the finest quality of the netted varieties of cantaloupe, which are now in such demand in the eastern markets. The big steam plow has a spectacular appearance as it draws the chain of plows from one end of the field to the other by the aid of an immense cable.

CONVENTION PROGRAM.

The twenty-fifth annual convention of the American Seed Trade Association will be held at the Hotel Astor, New York, June 25 to 27. The program is shorter than some have been, but it was deemed advisable to allow plenty of time for the discussion of important committee reports that will be presented this year. The program is as follows:

"Reminiscences of the Seed Trade," by F. W. Bruggerhof, of J. M. Thorburn & Co., New York.

"What the Department of Agriculture Is Doing for the Seed Trade," by Dr. B. T. Galloway, U. S. Department of Agriculture.

"History of the American Seed Trade Association," by S. F. Willard, of Comstock, Ferre & Co., Wethersfield, Conn.

"The Congressional Seed Distribution," by Alexander Forbes, of Peter Henderson & Co., New York.

"The Twentieth Century Seed Catalogue," by J. Horace McFarland, Harrisburg, Pa.

"Is It Advisable to Offer Discounts from Catalogue Prices?" a discussion, opened by Walter P. Stokes, Philadelphia, Pa.

Changes in the by-laws are proposed raising the annual dues to $10 a year and providing that if the personnel of a firm or corporation is changed, membership can be continued only by unanimous vote of the membership committee.

The entertainment committee promises a pleasant, as well as profitable, week to

This charming addition to our greenhouse Primroses originated at the Royal Gardens, Kew, as an accidental cross between the small, but bright-flowered Himalayan species, P. FLORIBUNDA, and the sweet-scented P. VERTICILLATA, a native of Arabia. The plant is a strong grower, with bright green leaves, and numerous erect flowerstems, 10 to 18 inches in height, producing flowers in whorls at intervals along their whole length. The flowers are fragrant, bright yellow in color, with a slender tube and spreading limb, nearly an inch in diameter. As a winter-flowering decorative plant it is an acquisition: its floriferousness when in a very small state is remarkable.

BEST SINGLE HYACINTHS.

The Dutch Bulb Growers' Association held a unique exhibition of bulbs at Sassenheim, Holland, the exhibitors planting the bulbs in various beds designed and laid out by H. J. Goemans, of the firm of Roes & Goemans. Flowering trees and shrubs and various evergreens and plants were also provided for in their particular classes, the whole going to make an interesting and instructive tive show. The principal bed contained 10,000 hyacinths and was arranged to produce the best effect with four best bedding varieties. The names were: King of the Blues, blue; Mme. Van der Hoop, white; La Peyrouse, blue; Gertrude, rosy red. All were single varieties. B. J.

GOVERNMENT SEED SHOP.

In his annual report, just published, covering the year 1906, B. T. Galloway, chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, United States Department of Agriculture, says:

Congressional Distribution.

"The congressional distribution of seeds and plants was carried on during the past year essentially as in the year preceding. The contract for packeting, assembling, and mailing vegetable and flower seeds was awarded to the Brown Bag-Filling Machine Co., of Fitchburg, Mass., at $1 per thousand packets, this being the lowest bid received. A total of 36,410,025 packets of vegetable and flower seeds was put up under this contract during the period from November 27, 1905, to April 25, 1906. The usual quotas of cotton seed, grass seed, bulbs, grapevines, and strawberry plants were sent out on congressional order, the only change from the preceding year being that the tobacco-seed distribution, previously carried out by the allotment of regular quotas, was confined to a limited distribution of seed of improved varieties, conducted in cooperation with Plant Breeding Investigations.

Seed Testing.

"On account of the increasing demand for seed testing it has been found necessary to limit the number of tests made for any one firm or individual. In this way the work is more widely distributed and only the more difficult samples are received. There have been received during the year a total of 7,261 samples. Of these 1,392 were sent in through the custom-houses, and 5,869 were from farmers, seedsmen and from culars Nos. 14, 15, and 18 of the Office of the Secretary. This work has shown that orchard grass is the farm seed most subject to adulteration, both meadow fescue and the rye-grasses being used as the adulterant, according to the relative prices of these various kinds of seeds.

"Alfalfa and red clover seed have both been found to be adulterated with the seed of yellow trefoil. Alfalfa has also been found to be adulterated with the seed of bur clover. The bur clover used is not, however, the commercial seed offered for sale in the United States, but is a by-product from the cleaning of South American wool, imported from Germany for this purpose. As was pointed out in a previous report, the only effective way of preventing the use of such seeds as yellow trefoil, bur clover, and Canada bluegrass as adulterants would be the levying on them of a duty making the price comparable to that of the seeds with which they are mixed.

"As a result of the work on adulterated seeds, seedsmen are sending large numbers of samples to the laboratory to be examined for the presence of adulterants and are giving more attention to the quality of seeds which they are offering for sale. At the same time, farmers are sending a larger number of samples for testing, as they are becoming acquainted with the fact that a number of the more common farm seeds are frequently subject to adulteration.

Imported Grass Seeds.

"Among the 1,392 samples of grass and forage-plant seeds received through the various custom-houses during the past year all qualities of seed, from the very best to the very poorest, were represented. Among the poorer of these seeds is included much low-grade red clover seed which is imported for the purpose of mixing with that of better quality. The larger part of the low-grade seed could not be sold alone in our market. Its only use is for mixing with seeds of better quality in producing intermediate grades. The use of this class of seed is doubtless more detrimental to agriculture than the use of the various seeds which are usually considered as adulterants.

Plans for Next Year.

"During the ensuing year more attention will be given to the study of the quality of seeds offered on the market, including tests for adulteration. Observation will be made on the growing and harvesting of forage-plant seeds, in order to determine any natural mixtures which occur in the fields. More attention will be given to the perfecting of methods of testing, with a view to aiding the state

TULIP WHITE SWAN.

Ever since tulips have been forced in England La Reine has held the premier position as a white early forcing variety, and probably it will be many years before any other sort of tulip is forced in equal quantities. For cheapness, ease of cultivation, earliness of flowering, for providing a quantity of white bloom at a cheap rate, it has no equal, but for better class work La Reine is being considerably superseded by that lovely white tulip, White Swan. This variety is absolutely pure white, with a total absence of the pink tinge sometimes objected to in La Reine. It is as easy to force as La Reine and nearly as early. The growth is much taller and stronger and the constitution much more robust; consequently the percentage of failures is much smaller. The bloom is twice as large, and is egg-shaped, similar to the now well-known Darwin section but somewhat longer in the petal. In fact, some firms describe it as a half-bred Darwin variety, but its most valuable characteristic is the ease with which it can be forced to perfection, coupled with its lasting qualities when cut, ten days being no uncommon time for it to remain fresh and in good condition in a cut state. In the bulb districts of Holland it is an easy propagator and can be grown as cheaply and plentifully as any of the other popular early forcing sorts as soon as the stocks are sufficiently increased.

As an outdoor tulip it is later than the early sorts and blooms before the May flowering varieties. It is one of the few tulips that will grow and freely propagate in England, and in that respect may be classed in the May flowering section. For these reasons the price will soon be at a useful figure, that is, between 20 and 30 shillings per thousand for the true variety. This year it is 50 shillings per thousand.

It is difficult to get the true type, as there are many useless forms offered. Some firms offer J. Cooper van Bierom as White Swan, though the former is a much inferior variety, while some offer varieties called White Hawk and also White Falcon as the true White Swan. Some firms have the true stock under these names. On the other hand, in some cases if these sorts are ordered a totally different variety is received. NEWPORT, R. I.

Current Comment.

The fact that in Newport spring weather, as such is, or was, commonly known, was not experienced this year seems to intensify the change in the appearance of things in a week. Even now the weather is not too warm, but the change has worked wonders in vegetation. A week ago there was scarcely a leaf unfolded on the maple trees on Bellevue avenue. Now they are almost in full foliage.

To give further instance of the lateness of things, the lilac shows no sign of being fit for use on Decoration day. By the way, the absence of lilac for that occasion is by no means deplored by florists in general. Several expressed the opinion that the lack of it will make business much better in more profitable lines, and there seems a good deal in that, too, because many possessed of means to purchase other kinds of flowers would think twice about doing so if they knew where they could put their hands

THE FLORISTS' REVIEW,
Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:—

Please stop our regular adv. running at present and give us just enough of your valuable space to keep our name before the trade. We are drawing to the close of the most successful season in the Florists' Department we have had in years, and at the present time, while we have a reasonable quantity of about everything that Florists use, we have no surplus to advertise.

With the present to encourage us we are "laying pipe" for future business on a bigger scale than ever before.

Yours very truly,

JAMES VICK'S SONS.

W. H. D.—K.

on any quantity of lilac, which would answer some purposes just as well as flowers they would have given their good money for.

The planting of trees is not yet completed for the season, although the bulk of the work is done. The several Newport nurserymen, especially Mr. Vanicek, of the Rhode Island Nurseries, also deal extensively in bedding plants. The slackening in the line of nursery work will enable them to give required attention to sales and shipments of geraniums and other kinds of bedding plants. The season for bedding that class of material commences in earnest early in June and will continue without a break-up to the middle of June. There are immense quantities of that stock needed here and it is seldom that the end of the planting season finds the growers with a surplus on their hands. On the contrary, often large numbers have to be purchased by them to fill orders.

English ivy suffered to an unexpected degree this winter. Even that which was not killed outright had all the foliage killed, necessitating the removal with the shears. The unusual mortality of ivy causes, of course, a big demand for it, especially for large plants three feet or over in height. As luck or something else would have it, Galvin had on hand a large number of that size, for which he had ready sale at remunerative prices. About three years ago ivy suffered much the same as it did this year, and then there was scarcely a plant to be had in town. There even was considerable difficulty experienced by those in need of it to procure all they wanted anywhere. There is one grower in Newport who strikes anywhere from 10,000 to 20,000 ivies every fall, every one of which he disposes of without the slightest difficulty, in flats and in 3-inch pots at from $3 to $5 per hundred, in the early spring. This year Wadley & Smythe took the whole lot this man had.

Wadley & Smythe are doing an immense business in the laying out of grounds in various parts of the country, and it would seem that if that part of the firm's business goes on increasing in the future the way it has in the last year or two, the retail florists' department will be to them but a secondary matter. This week they made some heavy shipments of evergreens from their Newport nursery to Ohio, and it is understood that their output from this nursery, which they have but recently purchased, will total up to a sum nearly equal to two-thirds of the amount the whole nursery, including stock and buildings, cost them.

This week F. L. Zeigler has been receiving exceptionally fine Beauties from Carl Jurgens. Unlike many growers in other sections of the country, Mr. Jurgens finds the summer months fully as profitable as those of the winter, and he has facilities and equipment for the supplying of roses and lily of the valley especially for the Newport season, which commences in the middle of June.

There is one class or kind of flowers that is not at all grown by commercial men, strictly speaking, in Newport. I mean orchids, and the demand for them is decidedly on the increase. There is one private place which is not occupied by the owner and where the plants and cut flowers are marketed. Quite a number of orchids are grown there, but not enough to supply the trade of one florist on the avenue.

The men who were roaming through Newport looking for gypsy moths did not find any, but if they had been instructed to look for the San Jose scale they would not have the same kind of a story to tell.

MAX REILLY.

FITHIAN, ILL.—Albert Harris reports a good stock and active demand for it.

Vegetable Forcing.

THE white fly that is such a troublesome pest in some tomato houses, has its counterpart in Florida, where a species named Aleyrodes citri affects oranges, lemons and citrons. To combat this pest experiments are now being made in the use of a fungus, Aschersonia aleyrodes, which is parasitic on the white fly.

VEGETABLE MARKETS.

CHICAGO, May 29.—Cucumbers, 40c to 75c doz.; leaf lettuce, 30c to 32½c case; mushrooms, 45c lb.

NEW YORK, May 27.—Mushrooms in light supply and firm, with some fancy exceeding outside quotations. Cucumbers steady. Other hothouse stock about out of the market. Cucumbers, 40c to 85c doz.; lettuce, 50c to 75c doz.; mushrooms, 25c to 75c lb.

BOSTON, May 27.—Weather continues very cold, with frosty nights. All hot-house stock continues in good demand. Cucumbers, $2 to $4.50 box; lettuce, 50c to $1.25 doz.; radishes, $1.50 box; parsley, $2 box; mushrooms, $2 to $3 per 4-lb. basket; tomatoes, 20c lb.; romaine, $1 doz.; escarole, 75c to $1 doz.; beets, $1.50 doz. bunches.

PINCHING CUCUMBER PLANTS.

In the growing of cucumbers under glass we wish to know about pruning the plants. Do you remove any of the side shoots as they appear on the main vine, or do you train them up and let them all bear fruit? If two or three little fruits appear in one place, that is, at the base of a leaf, should one be left and the balance be removed, or should all be left? On some nights when it seems too warm to fire, if the temperature fall to 50 or 55 degrees, what will be the effect on the crop or the plants? W.

Pruning is an unknown term in the handling of cucumber plants. We use the term pinching, which means that the shoots are stopped at a soft, tender stage, when the operation can be done by the finger and thumb, without the aid of a knife. It would only be a waste of energy to allow the growth to run so as to need the assistance of a knife. The side shoots should in no case be removed, since it is on them that you must depend for your crop, as fruit seldom appears on the main or leading shoots. The idea in pinching is simply to keep the plants in shape and where they belong, so that they won't run into and through one another, which would leave the foliage so thick and so exclude light and air as to hinder the development of the flowers and fruit. The main or leading shoots should be trained upright to the wires and the side shoots trained crosswise, the latter being stopped by pinching out the points so that they will nearly meet but not overreach the shoots on the plants on either side. With the growth properly controlled by pinching, the plants should be vigorous enough to support all the fruit that will set and the pinching off of any of the fruit will be unnecessary.

A temperature of 50 or even 55 degrees is too low for cucumbers. For all the little extra trouble or expense attached to it, it will be far better to keep up a little heat on cool nights. The cool temperature would not injure the plants so much, as they would recover from the check, but would be almost sure to result in the dropping of the fruit, especially any fruit in the smaller stages of development, which after such a check would turn yellow and drop off in the course of a few days. W. S. CROYDON.

TRUCKING ON LONG ISLAND.

The productive market gardens of the towns of Newtown, Jamaica, Hempstead, North Hempstead and Oyster Bay, Long Island, have for years played an important part in supplying the Manhattan and Brooklyn markets with early potatoes, cabbage, peas, beans, sweet corn, tomatoes, celery, lettuce, asparagus, onions, rhubarb, radishes, beets, pickles. A daily average of from 300 to 500 market wagons wend their way to Wallabout, Washington or Fulton markets, or other smaller markets of down-town Manhattan or to the uptown Harlem markets. Today the market garden zone is being pushed farther to the eastward. The truck growers of Flatbush, Jamaica and Newtown have sold their truck farms to the big development syndicates at prices that are prohibitive as to farming purposes, and the owners have, in many instances, moved into eastern Nassau or to the towns of western Suffolk, from which sections the fine improved roads enable them to get their products to market with greater facility than was possible from points fifteen miles away from market twenty years ago.

The fertile towns of Southold, Riverhead and the Hamptons still hold their pre-eminence as the finest market garden areas of the United States, and an average per year of not less than 2,500,000 bushels of potatoes and 200,000 barrels of cauliflower, 40,000 bushels of lima beans, tens of thousands bunches of asparagus, large quantities of onions, turnips and other vegetables; 200 or 300 tons of seeds, such as cabbage, cauliflower, tomato and other varieties are shipped to the New York city and New England markets.

PACIFIC COAST.

THE Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Nursery Co. is clearing a tract of land at Fremont, Wash., and shortly will begin planting.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.—The green aphid has been troublesome to the rose growers this season, blasting or deforming the buds just in the midst of their spring glory. Whale-oil soap is a fair remedy, though tobacco decoctions are far better. If the lady birds would tend to their "knitting" these nits would disappear before they had developed to the sucking age.

MODESTO, CAL.

Campin & Moffitt now have the largest nursery establishment in Stanislaus county. They have fifty acres in nursery stock and plan to extend the acreage right along for a year or two to come. They sold out everything this year and could have sold much more stock had they possessed it. For the next planting season, they will have 80,000 peach trees and 20,000 plums, apricots and almonds; also 20,000 Calimyrna fig trees. They will also have 100,000 rooted vines. They will bud this season, for sale for the planting season after the next, 500,000 peaches, 10,000 pears, 5,000 cherries, 5,000 apples and some other varieties of fruit, and will extend the acreage of vine cuttings.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

I regret to have to make a report again of poor business for the last week, but in surveying over the ground it would be useless to pretend that everything is not at a very low ebb. We are in the third week of the street car strike and, although the cars are running after a fashion, still they are not being patronized by anything like the number of people they should be. Continued annoyances from strike sympathizers have made the traveling public timid and on some lines, especially those that penetrate the poorer parts of town, the situation still remains serious. All of this confusion tends to make matters extremely quiet, and were it not for the out-of-town shipping and a few stray funeral orders we would be down and out.

There has been a fair demand, however, in the country for cut flowers for Memorial day and several of the dealers report large sales. Flowers, although not quite as plentiful as they were a few days ago, are still in good supply and the prices continue low. Sweet peas have lowered in price somewhat, as they now cost the retailers but 75 cents per dozen bunches. Carnations can be had from $1 up to $2.50 per hundred. Valley is plentiful and moves slowly. Liliun longiflorum is being brought into town by the Japanese growers in large quantities and costs the retailers about $2 per dozen stems. Japanese-irises make the windows showy and are taking the place of the peonies, which are practically out of season now.

The Wittbold Watering System

Although designed for watering in the Greenhouse, it is Splendidly Adapted to Field Watering

"It won't be long before it will be universally used."

ALOIS FREY, Head Gardener, Lincoln Park, Chicago.

"It is the King of Sprinklers; beats everything in the watering line."

J. B. ADAMS, Pass Christian, Miss.

To show the small cost of equipping an acre of ground for outside watering, as far as nozzles and swivel wheels are concerned, will submit the following figures: There are approximately 44,000 square feet to the acre. My $\frac{1}{8}$ -inch nozzle will, with a good pressure, cover 300 square feet of ground and by first watering on one side of pipe and then on the other side, each nozzle will cover 600 square feet, or about 80 nozzles to the acre, which, at 15c each, will cost \$12.00 per acre for nozzles. Four swivel wheels will easily control the nozzles on an acre. These at \$2.00 each, \$8.00, would make the cost of wheels and nozzles only \$20.00 per acre.

Send for circular of testimonials from those who use the Wittbold System under Glass.

for greenhouse or garden use is far superior to anything on the market; the spray can be changed instantly from a fine fan-shaped spray into any form or shape the operator may desire, by simply pushing a sleeve backward and forward. PATENTEE,

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSEYMEN.

Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Vice-Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Sec'y, Geo. O. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 32d annual convention will be held at Detroit, Mich., June 12 to 14, 1907.

ONE of the great difficulties with the nursery business this spring has been the difficulty in securing capable labor. All labor is higher in price.

W. A. ENGLAND, Flintville, Tenn., reports the loss of 30,000 cherry and several thousands of peach trees as a result of the cold weather of early spring.

THE Peterson Nursery, Chicago, is executing a contract for landscape work amounting to $10,000, at St. Xavier's Academy, Fiftieth street and Cottage Grove avenue, Chicago.

THE magnolias on Oxford street, Rochester, N. Y., always are one of the sights of the city in May. This year the display, an eighth of a mile on each side of the street, has made an even finer show than usual.

WITH the annual convention of the American Association of Nurserymen less than two weeks away, it looks as though the meeting will find the members much busier than usual when the hour for departure arrives. It is expected, however, that the attendance will be the largest on record.

CAREFUL investigation in the six large nurseries near Monroe, Mich., shows that the severe frosts in late May killed half a million trees. All night May 20 the nurserymen kept huge bonfires going in the fields surrounding the trees, in the hope that the warm air floating over the trenches would offset the effects of the frost, and in this they were partly successful. There was heavy snow in parts of the lower peninsula of Michigan May 27.

WORD comes from Jackson, the capital of Mississippi, that "the United States Nursery Co., of Rich, Coahoma county, a corporation formed at that center for the purpose of improving the horticultural and pomological industry, has become so enthused over the prospects as to lead to the adoption of a resolution to amend the original charter in order to increase the capital stock from $25,000 to $75,000. This company was formed some two years ago, and the result of that organization was such as to insure its permanency from the start and the enlargement of its powers and increase of capital stock by $50,000 are the logical outcome of natural conditions."

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS.

It must be exasperating in the extreme to nurserymen and other practical men to see flowering shrubs mutilated in the way they very often are on public grounds and private estates. This mutilation is carried on systematically every spring or in late winter, under the term of pruning, and pruning it is, too, when all or nearly all of the wood, which, if left as it should be, would produce bloom in abundance, is cut right out. It might help matters if nurserymen would give a few explicit directions for pruning with all shrubs sent out. This, I think, could be done without a very great expense by having the directions printed on tags and using these as labels also.

All the weigelias are useful for planting on grounds of limited extent and W. nana variegata is especially desirable because of its variegated foliage; it is also a very good bloomer.

Late flowering shrubs are by no means abundant; it is a realization of that fact, perhaps, that is the cause of an increasing demand for some varieties of hibiscus (Rose of Sharon or altheas). These shrubs do remarkably well in almost every situation and are suitable for planting in borders or singly, or in groups on lawns, as well as for hedges.

Hydrangea Otaksa in tubs may to some persons appear all right when placed on the grass, but it would seem that it would be more pleasing to look at, as well as better for the plants, if they were planted in the soil. They are easily taken up in the fall and tubbed if necessary.

The necessity may arise occasionally for the planting of evergreen trees closely in groups—so closely that at the time of planting one touches the other, the apparent object in doing so being immediate effect, but there is no reason why the trees should remain as planted after a few years or when they get established. In the event of the trees remaining close together, they will either require clipping, which detracts immeasurably from their beauty, or they will get into such a state that only a few top branches remain, but if judicious trimming is resorted to, the effect originally aimed at will be rendered permanent, with the additional consideration of the trees being allowed to develop in their natural habits of growth.

Taxus fastigiata (the Irish yew) is used in large numbers for formal planting in gardens and other places. It is particularly useful for that kind of work, because it retains its distinct pyramidal habit without the assistance of the knife or shears, but when the trees attain a large size it will be advisable to tie the branches in order to keep them from spreading apart.

Plumbago Larpentæ (leadwort) is a splendid, hardy little herbaceous plant for planting along the base of a wall where a narrow border calls for something of that nature. This plant grows not more than ten inches high. It has beautiful dark green foliage. The flowers are borne in great profusion in pronounced clusters well up over the foliage. The color of the flowers is a remarkably intense blue and they appear in late summer, continuing well into the autumn.

The hardy chrysanthemums are especially commendable for planting in places where flowers are in demand for outdoor effect late in the autumn, and there is one that in particular lends itself admirably for that purpose, and that is Golden Fleece. It is clear yellow in flower, and when a number are planted either in a long, continuous border in front of shrubbery or in a mass in a bed, the effect in the fall is more than striking. Prince of Wales is a good white variety that can be used for the same purpose effectively.

Dianthus barbatus (sweet william) is a perennial and flowers the second year from seed. This good, old-fashioned flower of our ancestors is coming to the front again, and no wonder. R. R.

EVERGREEN SEEDLINGS.

In the case of the United States versus P. Ouwerkerk, the U. S. Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York, May 14, found for Ouwerkerk. The government had appealed from a decision of the Board of General Appraisers, as reported at the time in the REVIEW, which held that:

"Species of the laurel (Aucuba Japonica and Kalmia latifolia) and of the rhododendron (Rhododendron ponticum), which retain their verdure throughout the year, are 'evergreens' within the meaning of paragraph 252, tariff act of 1897; and under said paragraph seedlings of those plants are dutiable as 'evergreen seedlings' rather than as 'nursery stock.'"

The government's contention as stated in the petition was that the board was in error in holding that the word "evergreens" as applied to plants covers not only those commonly known as "evergreens" but also other plants which retain their verdure through all seasons,

DESTROYING INFECTED STOCK.

The fruit inspection law of Idaho is being enforced most vigorously by the state horticultural inspector and his deputies. State Inspector A. F. Hitt reports wholesale destruction of infected fruit trees in different parts of the state. In district No. 9, comprising Kootenai, Bonner and Shoshone counties, 7,000 fruit trees have been recently dug up and burned by order of the horticultural inspector, because of their being so infested with insect pests. The owners seemed to be converted to the idea and did not hesitate to conform to the instructions of the inspector.

Mr. Buckley, the northern Idaho inspector, also reports having destroyed 5,000 fruit trees out of one shipment, on account of their being infested with San Jose scale. In another instance he held up two carloads, containing 17,000

ELBERON, N. J.

The regular meeting of the Elberon Horticultural Society was held May 20. The principal feature of the evening was a paper on "Herbaceous Plants," read by W. D. Robertson. An interesting discussion followed the reading. Arrangements are nearly completed for the society's summer flower show, which will be held July 24 and 25. Many of the seedsmen have donated special prizes. A. Bauer was awarded a cultural certificate for a vase of Gladiolus Augusta. W. D. Robertson was awarded cultural certificates for a plant of Cattleya gigas, which was fine, some of the flowers being nine inches and a half from tip to tip; and for a dish of Palmetto asparagus. A. Greib showed a vase of Cercis Canadensis; P. Murray, a plant of Dendrobium thysiflorum; J. Kennedy, vases of carnations; and B. Wyckoff, a vase of calceolarias. The society will hold a rose and strawberry show June 17. G. M.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

A pamphlet has been issued giving the full list of premiums offered in the department for floriculture at the State fair here, September 27 to October 5. The list is much the largest of any ever offered for floriculture. There are 147 classes, only forty-seven of which are restricted to amateur growers. The premiums are liberal, for fifty Beauties three prizes being offered, $50, $35 and $25. For dinner-table arrangements the sums are $50, $30 and $20. For groups of stove and greenhouse plants the premiums are $60, $40 and $20. For best set piece the premiums are $50, $30 and $20.

It is expected that the result of the increase in premiums will be to bring out a floral display much larger than any ever seen at a state fair. Those who wish copies of the list should address W. C. Garrard, secretary, Springfield, Ill., or Robert O'Dwyer, superintendent of floriculture, Desplaines and Monroe streets, Chicago.

OGDEN, UTAH.

Florists of Ogden perfected an organization at the court house May 21, for the promotion of good fellowship, the culture of flowers and the improvement of the general appearance of the city parks and public places. T. W. Stilwell was elected president and F. J. Hendershot, Jr., secretary and treasurer.

A committee was appointed to meet with the Civic League and the park commissioners for the purpose of selecting locations for flower beds which the florists have offered to place on city property at an early date. These beds will be seasonable, and will be renewed each spring. A plot is being worked out to adorn the west half of the city square, which will be sowed with grass this summer. Besides offering such gifts to the city, the organization will promote interest in the maintenance of lawns, shrubbery, trees and plants.

The Ogden Florists' Society is the name selected.

MENASHA, WIS.—Jos. B. Froehlich will build two more greenhouses this summer, and they, as well as his residence, will be heated by hot water.

FREEPORT, ILL.—John Bauscher, Jr., has purchased from Mrs. George Blust the two-story brick building on Chicago street, Bennethum & Rotzler occupying the first floor and Dr. Currier the second. Mr. Bauscher will change his location from the Fry building during the summer or fall.

DETROIT.

The Market.

Business remains about as reported last week. There seems to be little doing except in the line of funeral work, and not enough of this to go around. The weather is still anything but pleasant. The few warm days we have had have nearly always ended in a heavy frost at night. Up to the present time there are few orders booked for June weddings.

Considerable stock arrives daily, but is usually cleaned up by evening. Much stock is shipped to the small neighboring towns. The quality of the stock is good. Some good Kaiserin and La Detroit roses come in handy. Sweet peas are arriving in large quantities and are of good quality, selling readily at 75 cents. The first Michigan peonies put in their appearance May 24. Much excellent Canadian valley is sold in this market.

Various Notes.

Owing to the backwardness of the weather, there has been little done in the way of planting outdoors up to the present writing. In former years the work was always about completed by Decoration day.

August Von Boeselager, of Mount Clemens, is the proud father of a bouncing baby girl. This means cigars at the next club meeting.

J. H. Berry, the capitalist, died at his Grosse Pointe home Wednesday, May 22. It will be remembered that Mr. Berry was a lover of flowers, particularly orchids, of which he had a fine collection. For the present there will be no changes made at the greenhouses, where Henry Fruck is in charge.

The Detroit Cut Flower Supply House is handling some fine Brides and Bridesmaids, grown by the Pontiac Floral Co. Boxwood trees, Buxus sempervirens, sell like hot waffles in Detroit.

Robert Rahaly, of the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange, had an exceptionally heavy Decoration day business. H. S.

COLUMBUS, O.—A. C. Smith, R. B. Smith, E. L. Zimmerman, E. E. Barber and J. B. Kahle have incorporated the A. C. Smith Floral Co., with a capital stock of $10,000.

TORONTO.

The Market.

Trade during the last two weeks has picked up considerably in the city, and a noticeable decrease in supply has also taken effect. The spring races made quite a demand for flowers for various social functions.

Outdoor vegetation is this year fully two weeks behind other seasons and, from present appearances, lilac and other outdoor flowers, which are usually plentiful for June weddings, will not be in, so that decorations will have to be made up of greenhouse stock.

Various Notes.

Several changes have been made in the stores in Toronto during the last two weeks. John McKerrighan has sold his business to J. McCullough, and Andrew Frost, late of Dunlop's, has been engaged as manager. Another new store has been opened at 844 College street, by A. J. Piddington. This is in a residence district and should receive a good family trade.

J. H. Dunlop suffered a heavy loss May 19, when 240 feet of one of his long greenhouses were blown down. The loss was confined entirely to the house, as the stock had just been cleaned out for replanting. The cause was the removing of adjoining houses to rebuild a range. This left the house exposed to the full sweep of the wind. This is the first accident of this kind Mr. Dunlop ever has had.

D. J.

MARQUETTE, MICH.

Mrs. L. H. Stafford has disposed of her interest in the Stafford Greenhouses to her sister, Miss Bada Schmidt, who will in the future have entire charge of the business. Mrs. Stafford has been compelled to retire on account of ill health, and will shortly leave the city in the hope that a change in climate may prove beneficial. The greenhouses, which have been established for twenty years, should not suffer under the management of Miss Schmidt, as she is a thoroughly capable florist and intimately acquainted with the details of the business, having acted as Mrs. Stafford's assistant for many years. Arrangements have been made whereby Delf's grocery will handle the products of Stafford Greenhouses downtown.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—Owing to the rebuilding of his store at 106 Baronne street, Charles Eble is temporarily located at No. 116 on the same street.

BUFFALO.

State of Business.

Owing to the weather conditions in and around Buffalo, the spring trade has been held back considerably, probably to the extent of twenty days. May 21 quite a snow storm visited Buffalo, the latest snow in fifty years. Following that we had a few frosty nights. Spring flowers of all kinds are away late and unless the sun shines and warm rains come outdoor flowers will not be in for Decoration day. To add to this, carnations are scarce, especially in the colored varieties. The arrival of peonies is a great relief to the market. Roses are beginning to get small with some growers.

The vase filling part of the spring trade is getting to be a big item in Buffalo, the bulk of the trade being done by D. Newland & Co., Wm. Legg and the Wm. Scott Co. It is estimated that 2,500 vases and pots are filled in Forest Lawn alone.

Various Notes.

A few weeks ago the Wm. Scott Co. lost one of its able employees, John Prisac, who ventured into the florist trade to do business for himself.

Unfortunately, owing to the Shriners' wreck on their homeward trip, several of the people killed were Buffalonians, which kept the florists busy, for flowers were furnished in abundance. Another of Buffalo's leading men died, and it is reported there were several designs from out of town as well as local work.

Wm. Scott is steadily improving and is now enjoying the country air at Corfu.

C. F. Christensen, of Eggertsville, who grows principally for the Buffalo market, has the finest spring stock for miles around. He is about six miles' drive from the city and he does not have to bring a plant to town. Buyers start early to secure his produce, and keep it up till he is cleaned out. His only trouble is union help. Lately the union men have aroused the employers to some extent, but nothing serious has developed, so we will say nothing more on the subject. We would like to know if in other cities there are unions formed. Let us hear from other correspondents.

ASTERS.

ROSBACH'S COMMERCIAL LATE.

We have been growing and perfecting this strain for the past five years and find it the best commercial variety that we have ever grown. On account of the uniformly double nature of the flowers, especially the white, it produces but little seed, consequently this is the first time that we are enabled to offer it to the trade. White, $5.00 per 1000; shell-pink, rose (a grand flower) and purple, $3.50 per 1000. Olmstead's Commercial White, the best early all-purpose florists' aster in cultivation, $3.00 per 1000.

Sample's, as good as you can get anywhere—white, shell-pink and purple, separate, $2.50 per 1000. A limited quantity of Queen of the Market, mixed, same price.

A. & G. Rosbach, Pemberton, N. J.

Asters from 2-in. pots, strong plants. Give them a trial and you will be convinced that they are the cheapest in the end. Vick's and Semple's Branching, all colors, $2.00 per 100. From seed bed, not crowded, 40c per 100.

GREENHOUSE CHIMNEYS.

There is one matter which I have never seen mentioned in the columns of the REVIEW, namely, the chimney. I have an iron stack now, and need another. Would a brick chimney be better? What would be the inside dimensions of the chimney and the thickness of the walls? I have one boiler and wish to set another for emergencies. I should like to use the same stack for both. Would it be better to have a separate flue for each? What height would be best? I have a hot water heater and expect to replace it with one of larger size. I use coke for fuel. Would it be best to have a door at the bottom of the stack for accumulation of soot? F. J. U.

The brick chimney is more permanent than the metal stack, although the initial cost of the chimney is much greater than that of the metal stack. The general rule used to determine the size of a stack is as follows: The area of the cross section of the stack should be equal to one-ninth the area of the grate surface of the boilers. If metal stacks were to be used, I should advise putting up a stack for each boiler, but if a brick stack is to be employed and the boilers are arranged in battery, use a breeching to connect them with the main stack. The area of the stack should be one-ninth the combined area of the grate surface of all the boilers to be cared for. The height of the stack is a matter of location and the character of draft desired. Tall stacks give stronger natural draft than short ones, but the prevailing type of construction on large power plants today is a short stack and forced draft. For low pressure work the natural draft of the chimney or stack will be sufficient. The thickness of the wall is determined by the type of construction and the height of the chimney. For details regarding the construction of boiler settings, see FLORISTS' REVIEW of December 31, 1903, page 269. L. C. C.

SHADING.

The time is now at hand when this important matter has to be considered, and as far as my experience goes, there are few other subjects connected with plant growing under glass which are so improperly carried out, or, I might say, understood. I think I have written on the same subject before, but there may be many new growers, and I venture to say there are some of the older ones who do not take sufficient care.

I might take the end of my story first, and say that the greatest evil is done by leaving shading of any kind on, after the full rays of the sun are partially off the subjects shaded. In looking back I can remember many instances where over-shading has caused failure.

With shading, circumstances have to be taken into account. After a few warm, showery days, if we get a sudden change to sunshine, the air being clear, and the glass washed clean, there is much more danger of mischief being done, especially as the dull period will have caused many plants to have made soft and tender growth. Under ordinary conditions many of our choicest ferns will thrive without any shading; but the hardest subjects will burn. Where these blisters occur, it used to be a practice to trace them, and by dabbing soft putty on the under side of the glass, the grease left would be sufficient to prevent burning for the rest of the season. I have seen many valuable palms spoiled through these burns from blisters in the glass. After the first sign of a spot on the leaves, I have found it easy to trace the blister by following up the bright spot which will show on the hand or a piece of dark paper.

The best cheap shading, says a writer in the Horticultural Advertiser, is made of whiting and starch, in the proportion of about three pounds of whiting to one of starch. The whiting should be thoroughly dried, and all lumps broken, the starch then being thoroughly mixed, and then made into a thick paste by adding water. After the paste is thoroughly beaten up, add boiling water, stir well, and after it is thoroughly mixed it may be boiled up again. Applied with a brush, this will make an effective shading without obstructing the light, and will generally last well through the season.

RAMBLING NOTES.

Our old-time friend, William Scott, of Buffalo, does not improve so rapidly as his host of friends would like to see. He spends his time between home and Corfu, where his son David keeps him bright. At the home place William, Jr., bids fair to keep up the name.

H. Keitsch & Son Co., of Buffalo, reports increasing business. The best advertising ever done was when the store was built over. Now it is their intention to rebuild a number of houses, in readiness for fall use. William Milley raises whole houses of fuchsias for Polish customers, who buy large numbers of this old favorite. John Spiess, Jr., will, on July 1, hand over his business to his son Edward, who promises to be as successful as pater ever was, and he is on Easy street. Kumpf Bros., just across the way, are thinking of enlarging their plant, as they are crowded for room.

John Weiss, of Middle Village, N. Y., is the czar of the Washington market and has some of the best buyers in town as patrons. He is one of the earliest WAYSIDE NOTES.

"Expansion is the order of the day," remarked Alfred Patrick, of Auburn, N. Y., as he showed me a plot of land upon which he will locate the nucleus of a new range of glass. Roses in solid beds are grown very successfully, one bed run for nine seasons now being thrown out. Amid a fine assortment of bedding stock I noted a batch of impatiens raised from seed obtained from Dreer—bright, catchy colors, not a dull one in the whole collection. They sell at sight and are very profitable to handle.

L. E. Marquisee, of Syracuse, N. Y., is busy planting out carnations. The seedlings are very thrifty; 60,000 plants are in the field and only the best are brought in. I never yet saw an off crop at this place. Flamingo is selling well in Europe. Foreman Bellamy will plant a general line for retail trade instead of running so heavily to the divine flower.

J. B. Keller's Sons, Rochester, N. Y., have one of the best collections of hardy perennials in the state, and as they are extensively engaged in landscape work, they have an opportunity to furnish choice stock at first hand. At the time of my visit the majority of the boys had been up all night decorating—one of the many big jobs they have had this season.

Fred Schlegel, of Rochester, says things could be better, but he is a hustler and not content with the average run of things. Hart's commission house is filling the bill. There is a fine chance for a big rose growing establishment to locate near-by.

Thomas Russell, of Jamestown, N. Y., has a big supply of bedding stock. Through the winter he supplies this town with fine lettuce. Improved Grand Rapids is the name and it is the best curly variety. More houses will be built this season. A. Bartlett, at Greenhurst, is also a successful grower of the delectable salad, which is always in demand. I understand A. N. Broadhead has disposed of his stock of poultry and intends covering the entire place with glass for the purpose of raising lettuce. There is money in it if it is done right. Fred A. Dorman reports a busy spring, with difficulty to keep patrons from planting out too soon.

E. Worden, of Jamestown, has an idea of guaranteeing the life of bedding stock when planted out early, by charging a higher rate—insuring it, as it were. He makes a great show at the Martin place.

Dan Offerle, of Warren, Pa., has almost fully recovered from the severe accident he met with some time since, when it looked as if one of our old-time fraters would leave us; instead of which he intends building more houses and will continue to turn out the fine stock for which this town is noted.

Charles Guenther, of Hamburg, N. Y., has left this busy corner of the carnation belt for a brief visit to the fatherland,

GRAND RAPIDS.

Current Comment.

Weather conditions since Easter have been peculiar for this season of the year—dark, cloudy, cold and snowy. We had regular March weather during all of April and the first part of May, the thermometer dropping to 26 degrees frequently. Carnations in the field, if they had been planted the preceding day, were badly frozen; those that had been out longer fared better, being somewhat hardened to the cold.

Roses only have been equal to the demand, except in the week following Easter. Carnations have been scarce, particularly colored varieties. White is at times scarce, at other times equal to the demand. Sweet peas are plentiful and fine. Tulips and other bulb stocks are off the market until outdoor ones come in.

Carnations have been planted in the field early this year, and, except cuttings still in the sand, all are in the field. The loss to some from the abnormally low temperature is considerable, yet frosty nights did not stop the ambitious florist who wanted his stock out because "the time has arrived, and hang the weather!"

Green goods are extremely scarce and one has almost to take a microscope to see the size of a string of smilax.

At the May meeting of the Florists' Club the unlucky number thirteen were present and had an interesting time. Prices were under discussion, and there is a general feeling that as everything else has gone up in price, the patient, overworked florist ought to share in the general prosperity. It looks as if higher prices would prevail this year. The next meeting will be in charge of N. B. Stover, who will arrange and carry out some program of his own getting up.

G. F. C.

SHELDON, ILL.—Alfred Runnion says trade has been good with him this spring, and his greenhouses are not large enough to supply the demand. He has a fine lot of sweet peas, asters, dahlias, verbenas and cannas and a good assortment of outdoor flowers. He is planning also to engage in mum growing on a small scale.

SEASONABLE

SUGGESTIONS

Summer Work Now in Order.

The rush and turmoil of another Memorial day is over and it seems to be generally admitted that in volume of business it far outranked any of its predecessors. Our own experience was that everything in the shape of a flower sold, the only trouble being that orders were more plentiful than flowers. The cold April and May made exceptional conditions which may not occur again for a decade.

Benches occupied a few days ago by stocks, candytuft, feverfew, marguerites and similar crops now present a sorry aspect and the clearing out of these, repairing any benches requiring overhauling, wheeling in new compost and making ready for the benching of chrysanthemums should now occupy considerable time. While we may expect some business from school graduations and June weddings for a few weeks, the volume transacted will now commence to dwindle and we must perforce make ready for another season.

Bedding out has been greatly delayed by the succession of cold waves, but weather conditions being now a trifle more genial, this work should be pushed with all possible speed.

Primulas.

In the rush of other spring work those useful little winter blooming plants, the primulas, are liable to neglect. They should now be in small pots in a cool, airy house and be kept well up to the light, but shaded from the sun's rays. P. obconica is less affected by bright sunshine than P. Sinensis, but each prefers some shade.

After the middle of June if your cold-frames are cleaned of bedding stock, prepare a place in one of them for your primroses. A coating of screened coal ashes should be placed in the bottom. The sashes will be better raised both top and bottom all the time and if, instead of coating the glass with limewash or some other shading, wooden lath shades are used when needed, the plants will not become so drawn and weak. On cloudy days the sashes will be better removed altogether, taking care to replace them, however, if heavy rain threatens.

Primulas prefer a light but moderately rich compost. One-half loam fairly well decayed and one-fourth each leaf-mold and old, dry cow manure, with the addition of a little fine charcoal and sharp sand, seems to suit them. Bone and other chemical fertilizers should not be used in the soil at this stage and in fact are better left out altogether. Plants in 2½-inch pots should, when ready, be moved into 4-inch. Take care in handling the Chinese varieties not to bury the plants too deeply, and not to break the rather brittle leaf stalks.

Begonia Incarnata.

While not equal to the Gloire de Lorraine in persistent blooming qualities, incarnata is a most excellent begonia for Christmas trade. If you have forgotten to put in any cuttings, do so without delay. They will be ready to pot off inside of three weeks and will make serviceable stuff in 5-inch pots before winter. This is a robust growing variety and will need a little careful pinching to keep it bushy. A stake to support it will also be necessary later in the summer. In addition to being valuable as a pot plant, this begonia is well adapted for cutting. It does not need any shade during the summer and we have seen it succeed well stood outdoors in a batch, the same as chrysanthemums. There are one or two much improved forms with flowers double the size of the ordinary type.

Begonia Rex.

The beautiful foliage of the finer varieties of Begonia Rex appeal to many. Propagation in winter in brisk bottom heat is usually resorted to, but during the summer if some sections of leaves are cut and placed either in a propagating house facing north or in flats of sand under a stage, where there is not much drip, they will root readily. Give a good watering after inserting them and then damp slightly each day, but do not water at all heavily or the portions of leaves may rot. Potted up as soon as young plants appear, nice stock may still be had for winter sales.

There are some beautiful named varieties of Begonia Rex and, as the plant can be safely recommended for dwelling house culture, it will pay each retail florist to keep a few on hand. If you have any old plants looking rather seedy, plant them outdoors under the shade of a tree in good soil and they will grow rampantly.

Care of Outdoor Stock.

Probably with the rush of Memorial business, weeds have got a start outdoors and the cultivator or hoe must be called into requisition. This question of cultivation is a vital one. Take note, if you will, how much faster plants in soil persistently stirred grow as compared with those left to bake. The intelligent use of the hoe is of far more value to your summer crops than the hose or lawn sprinkler, unless a serious drought makes artificial watering a necessity, and even then if the watering be not done thoroughly it is better omitted altogether.

Your carnations may need some topping and if stout weeds grow close to the plants, remove them carefully by hand.

Violets have made a good start this season, thanks to the cool, moist weather. Their principal growth is made during and after August. Keep the ground well stirred among them; and the same applies to stocks, asters, gladioli, sweet peas and many other outdoor crops. In mowing your lawns, save any clippings to mulch your sweet peas with. Any old manure you may have, even if almost spent, will make a useful mulching.

Fighting Insect Pests.

Spraying calendars appear in about every important seed catalogue, to say nothing of the magazines, but in spite of this we are being constantly asked how to spray and what to spray with. No one possessing a piece of land containing shade and fruit trees, or who grows hardy and tender flowering plants, can well afford to neglect spraying. It may be that a common syringe and pail may answer all needs, but there are so many useful auto-sprayers, knapsack sprayers, barrel sprayers and other similar appliances now made and offered at a moderate cost that one or the other will be found a necessary and paying investment. Even if the fruit trees do not need a dose of Bordeaux mixture or Paris green, or the currants hellebore, the shade trees may require protection from the ravages of some leaf-eating insects. For the latter purpose a preparation of arsenate of lead, ten pounds to 100 gallons of water, is effective. For the rose slug use hellebore; for green and black aphids, either kerosene emulsion, whale oil soap or one of the tobacco extracts diluted. Arsenate of lead will be found equally good and safe for squash and potato beetles. For the many blights affecting flowering plants, Bordeaux mixture is the sovereign remedy. Make it yourself, in preference to buying the weak decoctions usually sold in cans. About every plant appears to have some special foe, some of them several, and to grow outdoor crops of any kind successfully, a spraying outfit of some kind is as necessary as the hoe for cultivating the soil.

Brief Reminders.

Fumigate gloxinias, begonias and cyclamens for thrips, which are destructive if allowed any foothold.

Dust your chrysanthemums with tobacco dust to keep aphids in check. Use more care in fumigating now the weather is warmer. After a heavy smoking, spray the plants over early in the morning, before the sun strikes them, to help prevent burning.

If you have let your boiler fires out, clear the ashes away, disconnect stove pipes, oil all the heater you can reach. Hot water heaters should be kept full of water when not in use. Steam boilers need similar care. It won't pay to neglect them while not in service. They last longer if always in use.

Don't forget your Stevia serrata. Pot along as needed and pinch to keep bushy.

Late gladioli should be planted during the first half of June or early frosts may cut off the flowering spikes.

Sow aquilegias, Canterbury bells and foxgloves to secure strong plants for fall use.

Any geraniums you may be growing for winter flowering should be grown under glass and potted on before roots become matted. Pick off all flower trusses and pinch the more robust shoots to keep the plants shapely.

Keep carnations in the benches well hosed twice a week on clear days to control red spider, which will speedily render them worthless. Force of water is the best remedy for this dreaded pest, which should be allowed no quarter.

Look carefully after your late chrysanthemum cuttings. See that the earlier ones potted are benched as soon as possible.

Ply the hose freely during hot weather among hard-wooded stock in the open, such as azaleas, acacias, ericas, etc.

Keep young marguerites potted on and pinch out all flowers from them.

Have you made a list of hyacinths, tulips and other bulbous stock you will need another season? Do not leave the buying until you need them. Early orders will secure you better class bulbs.

Many handsome deciduous shrubs are now in flower. A few planted on your front lawn makes your home attractive and may bring you orders for similar stock. Especially desirable are the many fine lilacs, viburnums, loniceras and spiræas.

ably sold in quantity, and, as I said before, there is a time and a place for everything. CHARLES H. TOTTY.

MUM SPORTS.

No definite conclusion has been arrived at as to the cause of sporting in chrysanthemums, but every addition to our knowledge brings us nearer to the goal. On this account attention is called to a statement by M. Clement in Le Chrysanthème, to the effect that, in nine cases out of ten, the change is from light coloring to a darker shade. That yellow should be prominent in these sports is only what might have been expected from the ancestry of these plants. A yellow chrysanthemum is said rarely to produce a white flower, but a white variety may show yellow flowers; a red variety will throw maroon blooms, a rose-colored form will sport into a salmon-colored one.

SOIL FOR PLUMOSUS.

What is the best soil for growing Asparagus plumosus? S. C. C.

Asparagus plumosus likes a compost of three-fourths pasture loam and one-fourth dry cow manure, with some sand added. If in a bed, use six inches of soil and remember that solid beds are better than benches to plant in. C. W.

OWENSBORO, KY.—A. H. Snapp, from New York, is now in charge of the greenhouses of the Nanz Floral Co.

OREGON, ILL.—Harry Davis, the Polo greenhouse man, has had his wagons in Oregon during the last week, engaged in the sale of plants and bulbs, and has met with good success.

PLANTING.

Planting should be proceeded with this month, for all the main crop of flowers. Many growers have to wait until the bedding stock is out of the way, and it is during this interval of waiting that plants so often are neglected. The planting rush is on and the mums must wait, and in the meantime often suffer for want of water, becoming potbound, hard and stunted. Avoid this as much as possible if you would grow fine stock. If the plants are getting potbound and you are not yet ready to plant, either move them on into 4-inch pots or knock them out of the pots and set thinly into flats, putting soil between the balls. If the benches are full of other plants, one can at least have the soil chopped down and ready, so that the work of planting can be rushed when it can be got at.

Stock for Late Flowers.

Several inquiries having reached me last week on the time to plant for Thanksgiving flowers, I would say that there is yet plenty of time to propagate for late planting. Quite nice flowers can be obtained from plants rooted even as late as the middle of July, if the right kinds are grown. In fact, I know some commercial growers who have better success with stock propagated from now on than they do with the earlier stock, because they have more time to look after it. With the season so cool as it has been so far this year, propagation has been easy, but look out for the drying winds in June and by frequent spraying keep the cuttings from wilting.

A good selection of varieties to use for late planting is as follows: White—Chadwick, Mrs. Swinburne, J. Nonin and Timothy Eaton. Yellow—Yellow Chadwick, Mrs. Geo. Beech, Yellow Eaton and Nagoya. Pink—Winter Cheer, Dr. Enguehard and Maud Dean.

The last named I could never do much with myself, but I have seen it doing nicely in some places. With me it always made an enormous eye and would not cover in the center. Mrs. Swinburne and Mrs. Geo. Beech are two varieties that have done well in most sections of the country and can be recommended as being easily grown, not too large in foliage and doing well on the terminal bud. Enguehard is another variety that is best on the terminal and consequently comes in well for this late work. Enguehard got a black eye when it first came out, because so many growers caught it on too early a bud and the resultant flower was a wretched affair that looked more like a piece of sponge than anything else, with short petals sticking straight out. Now it has reached its level and occupies a fair place as a commercial pink for late flowers.

In the New York market late mums have not amounted to so much of late years as they once did, but there are many towns where they are welcome till December. It is by no means impossible to have them for Christmas, but in my humble opinion they are not much sought after so late as that. There is a time and a place for everything and the mum is never more welcome than in early October, when the frosts have stripped the outside flowers down and the people are hastening back to the city, and the crisp, nippy air reminds the florist that his summer loafing is ended. It is an easy matter to flower mums in May by propagating early in the year and keeping them in small pots for a time to harden up the wood. Several singles are a mass of buds and flowers with me, that have been so treated, but I question if they could be profit-

FLORIST.....

SECURING THE CARD.

One of the difficulties that practically every retail florist encounters, and which is especially exasperating, is the loss or misplacing of cards which are to accompany orders for delivery. The retailer who has a large business has things systematized so these accidents are reduced to a minimum, but the florist who does not have a large number of these gift orders to deliver does not always have the right system and is constantly getting into trouble. One of the best ways of keeping track of such orders is that adopted by W. J. Smyth, in Chicago. He uses a heavy printed envelope, with a flap for sealing at one end and punched at the other end, like a shipping tag, for tying. When Mrs. Van Rensselaer comes in with an order to deliver a plant or box of flowers to Mrs. Brown, Mrs. Brown's address at once is written in the spaces on the envelope and the donor's card, placed in a small envelope, is sealed within the larger one, which then is tied upon the plant. Subsequent decorations may or may not be added, but there is no chance for the card to get away.

BIRTHDAY BOUQUETS.

H. N. Bruns, Chicago, tells an interesting story of his experience with a gentleman who came into his store in search of something to send a lady as a birthday remembrance. He said the lady was seventy-four years of age and he wanted something nice. "I told him," says Mr. Bruns, "that in the flower business there is nothing which is thought more highly of than American Beauties, and suggested that he send a bouquet of seventy-four Beauties. At first he demurred because the cost was too much, but I showed him the flowers and finally he gave the order. I made up a bunch that was good value at the price charged, using seventy-three tight buds with one large open flower in the center. The next day the gentleman returned and said he came for the express purpose of thanking me for sending so nice a bouquet. 'The old lady received all kinds of presents,' said he, 'and some of them expensive, but there was nothing in the whole lot she thought so much of as the flowers. You will hear from me a year from now if nothing happens.' "

THE PEONY DECORATION.

This is the peony season and the accompanying illustration of a peony wedding will be of special interest. The circumstances which surrounded the execution of this order were chronicled at the time of its execution, when W. J. Smyth and his force were sent from Chicago with a special train to decorate the Catholic church at Mackinac Island, Mich., for the wedding of one of the daughters of one of the Cudahys, the Chicago packers. Mr. Smyth took from Chicago everything required for the job, which was one of the most elaborate of the season. Peonies were used in probably greater number than in any other wedding decoration since the peony attained its present popularity, and it may safely be said that there is no flower now so extensively used for June weddings as is the peony. Any misfortune which may have overtaken the peony crops this year will be of serious importance to the trade. The season is late, but the weddings are not, and the call for peonies is insistent.

The Cudahy wedding picture also shows how lavishly Mr. Smyth used ribbon. Considerable quantities of Asparagus plumosus strings were employed and a somewhat novel feature is the use of evergreen boughs.

NEPHROLEPIS SIEBRECHTII.

Siebrecht & Son, New Rochelle, N. Y., have a sport from the Pierson fern to which they have given the name Siebrechtii. Describing it, they say: "This is a sport in which the plummy peculiarity of the original form is even more distinctly developed than in the original; the side pinnæ being again subdivided and standing at right angles to the direction of the midrib, making both sides of the frond equally beautiful, while, at the same time, the plant is of much more compact habit, growing only one-half as tall, but with the fronds nearly twice as wide, making it a much more desirable plant for all purposes."

PELARGONIUMS.

Kindly describe the treatment pelargonium geraniums should receive after they are through flowering. My geraniums are in 5-inch pots and are in flower at present. T. D.

We presume that the show pelargoniums, commonly called Lady Washington geraniums, are referred to. After the flowering season is over, stand the plants outdoors and gradually withhold water. Our plants are laid on their sides and kept quite dry during August. Toward the end of that month they are shaken out of the pots, all soil removed, tops cut back quite severely and the ends of the longest roots also removed. They are then potted in as small pots as they can be conveniently squeezed into. Presuming your plants are now in 5-inch or 6-inch pots, they should go into 4-inch. Give a good soaking of water after potting, then keep a little dry until growth commences, after which time a gradually increasing supply may be given.

The plants prefer a cool and airy house, and 45 degrees at night is warm enough in winter. Cuttings taken off and inserted in sand early in August will make fine stock in 6-inch or 7-inch pots the following season. Be sure to shift the plants before they can become pot-bound. C. W.

SMILAX AND ASPARAGUS.

Smilax and Asparagus plumosus are about the first crops to go in, and for these there are no benches to build. Both of them should go right into the solid ground. This is particularly true of asparagus.

If the soil of the surface of the greenhouse is not suitable, all you have to do is to put up a plank 2x8 inches, held in place by some pieces of 1-inch pipe, and then fill in with soil that is one-fourth cow manure. Don't put boards or any other material at the bottom of the bed. As the asparagus will do in the same soil for three or four years, with an annual top-dressing, it should have a bed at least eight inches deep, and if it were twelve inches deep, none the worse.

The smilax pays best when planted annually and, therefore, six inches of soil will grow it well for one year. To get the best returns from smilax it

Keep young marguerites potted on and pinch out all flowers from them.

Have you made a list of hyacinths, tulips and other bulbous stock you will need another season? Do not leave the buying until you need them. Early orders will secure you better class bulbs.

Many handsome deciduous shrubs are now in flower. A few planted on your front lawn makes your home attractive and may bring you orders for similar stock. Especially desirable are the many fine lilacs, viburnums, loniceras and spiraeas.

ably sold in quantity, and, as I said before, there is a time and a place for everything. CHARLES H. TOTTY.

MUM SPORTS.

No definite conclusion has been arrived at as to the cause of sporting in chrysanthemums, but every addition to our knowledge brings us nearer to the goal. On this account attention is called to a statement by M. Clement in Le Chrysanthème, to the effect that, in nine cases out of ten, the change is from light coloring to a darker shade. That yellow should be prominent in these sports is only what might have been expected from the ancestry of these plants. A yellow chrysanthemum is said rarely to produce a white flower, but a white variety may show yellow flowers; a red variety will throw maroon blooms, a rose-colored form will sport into a salmon-colored one.

SOIL FOR PLUMOSUS.

What is the best soil for growing Asparagus plumosus? S. C. C.

Asparagus plumosus likes a compost of three-fourths pasture loam and one-fourth dry cow manure, with some sand added. If in a bed, use six inches of soil and remember that solid beds are better than benches to plant in. C. W.

OWENSBORO, KY.—A. H. Snapp, from New York, is now in charge of the greenhouses of the Nanz Floral Co.

OREGON, ILL.—Harry Davis, the Polo greenhouse man, has had his wagons in Oregon during the last week, engaged in the sale of plants and bulbs, and has met with good success.

PLANTING.

Planting should be proceeded with this month, for all the main crop of flowers. Many growers have to wait until the bedding stock is out of the way, and it is during this interval of waiting that plants so often are neglected. The planting rush is on and the mums must wait, and in the meantime often suffer for want of water, becoming potbound, hard and stunted. Avoid this as much as possible if you would grow fine stock. If the plants are getting potbound and you are not yet ready to plant, either move them on into 4-inch pots or knock them out of the pots and set thinly into flats, putting soil between the balls. If the benches are full of other plants, one can at least have the soil chopped down and ready, so that the work of planting can be rushed when it can be got at.

Stock for Late Flowers.

Several inquiries having reached me last week on the time to plant for Thanksgiving flowers, I would say that there is yet plenty of time to propagate for late planting. Quite nice flowers can be obtained from plants rooted even as late as the middle of July, if the right kinds are grown. In fact, I know some commercial growers who have better success with stock propagated from now on than they do with the earlier stock, because they have more time to look after it. With the season so cool as it has been so far this year, propagation has been easy, but look out for the drying winds in June and by frequent spraying keep the cuttings from wilting.

A good selection of varieties to use for late planting is as follows: White—Chadwick, Mrs. Swinburne, J. Nonin and Timothy Eaton. Yellow—Yellow Chadwick, Mrs. Geo. Beech, Yellow Eaton and Nagoya. Pink—Winter Cheer, Dr. Enguehard and Maud Dean.

The last named I could never do much with myself, but I have seen it doing nicely in some places. With me it always made an enormous eye and would not cover in the center. Mrs. Swinburne and Mrs. Geo. Beech are two varieties that have done well in most sections of the country and can be recommended as being easily grown, not too large in foliage and doing well on the terminal bud. Enguehard is another variety that is best on the terminal and consequently comes in well for this late work. Enguehard got a black eye when it first came out, because so many growers caught it on too early a bud and the resultant flower was a wretched affair that looked more like a piece of sponge than anything else, with short petals sticking straight out. Now it has reached its level and occupies a fair place as a commercial pink for late flowers.

In the New York market late mums have not amounted to so much of late years as they once did, but there are many towns where they are welcome till December. It is by no means impossible to have them for Christmas, but in my humble opinion they are not much sought after so late as that. There is a time and a place for everything and the mum is never more welcome than in early October, when the frosts have stripped the outside flowers down and the people are hastening back to the city, and the crisp, nippy air reminds the florist that his summer loafing is ended. It is an easy matter to flower mums in May by propagating early in the year and keeping them in small pots for a time to harden up the wood. Several singles are a mass of buds and flowers with me, that have been so treated, but I question if they could be profit-

SECURING THE CARD.

One of the difficulties that practically every retail florist encounters, and which is especially exasperating, is the loss or misplacing of cards which are to accompany orders for delivery. The retailer who has a large business has things systematized so these accidents are reduced to a minimum, but the florist who does not have a large number of these gift orders to deliver does not always have the right system and is constantly getting into trouble. One of the best ways of keeping track of such orders is that adopted by W. J. Smyth, in Chicago. He uses a heavy printed envelope, with a flap for sealing at one end and punched at the other end, like a shipping tag, for tying. When Mrs. Van Rensselaer comes in with an order to deliver a plant or box of flowers to Mrs. Brown, Mrs. Brown's address at once is written in the spaces on the envelope and the donor's card, placed in a small envelope, is sealed within the larger one, which then is tied upon the plant. Subsequent decorations may or may not be added, but there is no chance for the card to get away.

BIRTHDAY BOUQUETS.

H. N. Bruns, Chicago, tells an interesting story of his experience with a gentleman who came into his store in search of something to send a lady as a birthday remembrance. He said the lady was seventy-four years of age and he wanted something nice. "I told him," says Mr. Bruns, "that in the flower business there is nothing which is thought more highly of than American Beauties, and suggested that he send a bouquet of seventy-four Beauties. At first he demurred because the cost was too much, but I showed him the flowers and finally he gave the order. I made up a bunch that was good value at the price charged, using seventy-three tight buds with one large open flower in the center. The next day the gentleman returned and said he came for the express purpose of thanking me for sending so nice a bouquet. 'The old lady received all kinds of presents,' said he, 'and some of them expensive, but there was nothing in the whole lot she thought so much of as the flowers. You will hear from me a year from now if nothing happens.' "

THE PEONY DECORATION.

This is the peony season and the accompanying illustration of a peony wedding will be of special interest. The circumstances which surrounded the execution of this order were chronicled at the time of its execution, when W. J. Smyth and his force were sent from Chicago with a special train to decorate the Catholic church at Mackinac Island, Mich., for the wedding of one of the daughters of one of the Cudahys, the Chicago packers. Mr. Smyth took from Chicago everything required for the job, which was one of the most elaborate of the season. Peonies were used in probably greater number than in any other wedding decoration since the peony attained its present popularity, and it may safely be said that there is no flower now so extensively used for June weddings as is the peony. Any misfortune which may have overtaken the peony crops this year will be of serious importance to the trade. The season is late, but the weddings are not, and the call for peonies is insistent.

The Cudahy wedding picture also shows how lavishly Mr. Smyth used ribbon. Considerable quantities of Asparagus plumosus strings were employed and a somewhat novel feature is the use of evergreen boughs.

GIRARD, O.—William Gerke welcomed a baby daughter to his home June 1.

The smilax pays best when planted annually and, therefore, six inches of soil will grow it well for one year. To get the best returns from smilax it should be planted in June; then by the time to replant a year hence, you should have cut four crops. Smilax is mostly used in quantity. If you need fifty strings you have time enough to procure it of a specialist, but unless you have some on your own place, if you are a retailer, it is a continual annoyance sending to the wholesale house for a few strings. We daily notice the inconvenience of not having smilax on the place, and I am not sure that it is less profitable than many other plants that occupy our thought and space and upon which we put our labor.

The smilax, like the asparagus, is a heavy feeder, and should have a heavy loam with a third or fourth of fresh manure. Once the writer was compelled to use a light, gritty sand for our smilax bed, and it was a most pronounced failure. He also planted a lot of asparagus in a bed of good soil at least a foot deep, separated from the earth by planks, and that also was a failure, so avoid these mistakes.

tion will show. It is reproduced from a photograph made in one of their carnation houses May 27 and gives an idea of the crop of carnations they had for that period of unexampled demand. Mr. Weiland says it was the largest crop of carnations it ever has been his fortune to see. There were many plants which had as many as ten or eleven blooms which could be cut for Memorial day. From the bench in the center 2,500 were taken at one picking. The variety is Boston Market. Their whole cut for the four days preceding Decoration day was 25,000 blooms.

FLORIFEROUS BRITANNIA.

A. Smith, of Enfield Highway, N., Middlesex, England, in speaking of the fact that he is asking £3, or about $15, per thousand for rooted cuttings of Carnation Britannia, says: "My price is very little more than American prices for new varieties and is not considered too high by any who have seen Britannia, as it is about three times as prolific in blooming as is any other carnation. It really is a wonder and I have sold nearly all my stock for this season."

BOUND BROOK, N. J.—The progress in the construction of Thomas Young's new houses is seriously delayed by contrary weather and delays in freight traffic, but it is hoped they will be ready in good season for planting.

SHARON, PA.—It has been reported that M. I. O'Brien has sold out to Walter Mott and Frank Burfitt. Mr. O'Brien states that the deal has not been closed and that he is still doing business at the old stand, and expects to continue indefinitely.

USE OF LIME.

Please give me a prescription for sweetening my soil. Would air-slaked lime do it, and, if so, in what quantity? I planted my young carnations in the old garden where I had my soil from the greenhouse and would like to know if lime should be scattered on it, or would Bordeaux mixture be of any benefit? In what proportions should I use sheep manure for my carnations?

F. N. B.

This is a very indefinite query, but if the young carnation plants are growing properly in the field I would not apply anything in the shape of lime, or anything of that nature. If the soil lay outside, spread out over winter, so the elements could work on it, it will likely be in fair shape as regards sweetness, and during an average summer it is not likely to sour in the open. While lime will seldom do any harm, if applied in moderate quantities, yet it is not advisable to be continually doctoring your soil. One is apt to overdo it. We do not consider it advisable to spread old soil from the greenhouses on the field where young carnations are to be planted the following season. While this soil is usually tolerably rich, it is apt to contain fungous diseases and should be exposed to the weather at least two years before planting carnations on it. If sown down in red clover, it will be greatly benefited. First apply a good coat of air-slaked lime, then sow your clover and the second summer turn it under. By that time it will be in fair mechanical condition.

If you think your soil needs sweetening, then use air-slaked lime. Put on enough to whiten the surface of the soil and stir it in with your cultivator. Bordeaux mixture will do no good unless some fungous disease is present.

To advise you about the use of sheep manure one must know what shape it is in. If it comes from the stock yards and has considerable litter mixed with it, like stable manure, then I would use it in about two-thirds the proportion you would use stable manure. Sheep manure is strong, but if it is well incorporated with the soil and allowed to rot with it, it will not work any harm, even when used quite heavily. If it is in a pulverized state I would prefer to use it as a top-dressing later on. You will get more good out of it. In this latter state I would not use it stronger than about one part manure to fifteen parts soil and allow it to rot thoroughly. Better mix stable manure or cow manure with your compost pile, and use the sheep manure as a top dressing in the house later on. As a top-dressing, mix it with soil in equal portions and spread on the bench about a half-inch thick. There is less danger of harming the plants when mixed with soil than when it is used alone.

AMERICAN BEAUTIES.

I am frequently asked as to the best method of carrying American Beauties over a second season. The beginner and the inexperienced cling to the idea that it is a waste of material and labor to throw out the old plants when they are showing such vigorous growth and to substitute young stock in their place.

I wish it to be understood that I do not advocate carrying Beauties over a second season, as the results from such a method, according to my observation and experience, have been anything but encouraging. I will, however, give a résumé of the most successful way of doing the work and as it is practiced by those who have been most successful with two-year-old stock.

The benches should be partly dried off for a couple of weeks previous to lifting the plants. These, when lifted, should be heeled in on some high ground and pruned into shape. In about two or three weeks they will be ready to transplant.

The soil and benches should be prepared in the same way as recommended for young stock, only it is better to add another inch of depth to the benches by nailing an inch strip to the top of the sideboard.

The ball should be reduced in size as little as possible, as an injury to the roots will cause a check, planting just deep enough to cover the ball. The bench should then get a thorough soaking to settle the soil well around the roots, allowing the soil to become moderately dry afterwards, till root action has again commenced, when the supply of water can be gradually increased.

During this period the house should be kept rather close and moist, using the syringe freely at least twice a day during bright weather.

The soil should be stirred twice a week and should never be allowed to remain with a crust on it.

It is claimed that these plants, thus handled, will produce a greater quantity of medium length stems than young stock will do, a statement which I do not doubt so far as it applies to fall crops, but I have never seen a house so treated that could compare with a house of young stock handled properly, especially during the season of short days, when prices are at their best. DETERIORATION BY FORCING.

[A synopsis of an address by Antoine Wintzer, of West Grove, Pa., before the Florists' Club of Philadelphia, June 4, 1907.]

Are our roses deteriorating, or is it imaginary on our part? The real or supposed deterioration of roses is the subject of considerable discussion whenever practical rose men meet, at conventions or clubs. To me has been assigned by the honorable members of the Florists' Club of Philadelphia, the task of solving this rather knotty problem. Now, while a man may give his own reasons on any subject, it does not follow that he is right, and his experience may be at variance with that of others.

Causes of Deterioration.

My honest opinion is that a great many varieties of roses have deteriorated. Why have they done so? I believe the main causes to be overpropagation, unnatural conditions in growing the stock plants, under and overwatering, overfeeding, and various other causes too numerous to mention. We must also bear in mind the fact that thousands of new roses and types of roses have been originated during the last twenty-five years or more, less than two per cent of which are heard of ten years after.

The hybrid tea roses, to the production of which rose breeders are now devoting so much attention, were an unknown factor thirty-five or forty years ago. The breeders at that time were disseminating more H. P. varieties than all the other classes combined, the majority of which were introduced by Verdier, of Paris. It was through the efforts of the late Henry Bennett that the hybrid tea class had its beginning, wherein Bennett gave us beautiful varieties in form and color. Nearly all his productions were lacking in vigor, and to a greater or less extent this has been the case with the majority of the hybrid tea roses since. Practical experience has shown that only a limited number of this class are strong, field-grown in this latitude. In a great many sections of the south and the Pacific states they seem to grow and thrive better than in this section, although, even in those favored locations, they are not entirely immune from black spot.

The Remedy.

Now, what is the lesson the propagator can learn from observation? Secure the best and most healthy field-grown plants for propagation; grow the cuttings from such, under natural conditions, and continue on the plan for a number of years and the result will be that the roses so grown will not deteriorate. But it is of vital importance that the very best plants should be selected for breeders. This, in fact, is the secret of the whole matter; start right, keep on the right track, and you will stay right, and the stock you grow will be right.

Now in conclusion permit me to ask, how many growers are there in the business in the position to do this? With the wholesale prices of roses where they are at present, there is surely an eternal unfitness of things in our present price of own-root roses.

DUTY ON ROSE CUTTINGS.

As reported in the REVIEW of May 16, page 1992, the U. S. Circuit Court at Buffalo May 9 rendered a decision adverse to the Treasury Department's claims that rose cuttings out of sand are dutiable at 2½ cents each as "rose plants." The decision has now been published for the guidance of customs officers.

The case resulted from the importation of some cuttings of Bride, Maid and other varieties by the South Park Floral Co., New Castle, Ind., from J. H. Dunlop, Toronto. It was in the name of the American Express Co. as forwarding agent. The collector at Buffalo assessed duty at 2½ cents each and the importer protested. The Board of General Appraisers reversed the collector at Buffalo and the government directed that an appeal be taken. The matter has dragged along some three years. In his decision Judge Hazel said:

"The questions submitted arise upon a protest filed with the collector by the importer, who claims that the articles in question are rose cuttings and dutiable at twenty-five per cent ad valorem under paragraph 252 of the present tariff act. The importation was returned by the appraiser as rose plants and assessed for duty at 2½ cents each.

"I have read the testimony, together with the opinion of the board, and I think the board correctly decided upon the evidence presented that the importation consists either of cuttings of shrubs or 'cuttings of * * * plants * * * commonly known as nursery or greenhouse stock,' and as such is dutiable at twenty-five per cent ad valorem. It appears by the evidence of Mr. Carey, witness for the protestant, that the cuttings in question are put in sand in preparation for shipment, but that they have never in fact been in soil. The provisions of paragraph 252 are not absolutely clear, but the omission of congress to specifically mention cuttings or plants of the hybrid rose persuasively indicates, I think, that a broad interpretation of said paragraph was intended. I concur in the conclusions and reasoning of the board, whose decision is hereby sustained."

AMERICAN ROSE SOCIETY.

The executive committee of the American Rose Society held a meeting at the Hotel Martinique, New York, May 28, Mr. Bissett, president of the Washington Florists' Club, being present. In accordance with the authority given the executive committee at the Washington convention, the following resolutions were offered and carried:

Resolved, that hereafter any exhibit competing for the society's medals or certificate shall consist of twelve blooms.

Resolved, that a certificate of merit be awarded to any novelty covering eighty or more points, in accordance with the recommendation made at the annual meeting in Washington in March, 1907, and that this certificate be, and is hereby, added to the list of medals now offered by the American Rose Society for novelties, but the certificate is not to be delivered until the variety is named.

Resolved, that a certificate of merit be awarded to the varieties, Queen Beatrice scoring eighty-three points, Rhea Reid scoring eighty points, and the variety exhibited by Myers & Santman, Wyndmoor, Pa., scoring eighty-one points.

Resolved, that the climbing roses Paradise, La Fimma, Delight and Juanita, exhibited by M. H. Walsh, Woods Hole, Mass., be awarded a certificate of merit as recommended by the judges of the Washington exhibition, March, 1907.

E. G. Hill, of Richmond, Ind., advised that he would attend the nurserymen's convention and if opportunity offered, bring before that body the advisability of the support by nurserymen of the Rose Society, especially in the interest of hardy outdoor roses. On this point Philip Breitmeyer, vice-president-elect of the society, advocated that some recognition should be offered to induce exhibitions of outdoor roses, saying: "I offered a prize when at the meeting in Washington, for an exhibition of outdoor roses in bloom, say 100 or 150 plants in a group. This should be limited to outdoor roses but not limited to varieties. I have suggested this idea to several men who are largely interested in this class of stock and, in order to bring this to a head, I will offer $200 for a first prize and Mr. Boddington will offer $100 as a second prize to be awarded for such an exhibition in any form that is desired."

This liberal offer provoked much interest, calling forth the belief that so large a prize would stimulate efforts which had never been made before in this direction. Mr. Farenwald said: "I have never seen a good show of hybrid roses in pots at any of our exhibitions, but I admire the pluck of Mr. Breitmeyer in leading off as he has done in this direction and Mr. Breitmeyer deserves thanks for his liberal offer." The committee accepted the prizes of Messrs. Breitmeyer and Boddington with thanks.

The matter of increasing the membership of the Rose Society was brought forward and a further suggestion of Mr. Breitmeyer was favorably received. In speaking of the coming show at Chicago he said that he believes our field in the west is large and that the growers as a rule are in sympathy for mutual benefit.

Life memberships are greatly to be desired, so that thereby a permanent fund may be acquired. A suggestion was made following the recommendation of President Simpson in his annual address that a list of names of such men as may be eligible be distributed for life membership. Mr. Breitmeyer said he would be glad to be one of the executive committee to secure life members or to increase the membership to where it is desirable to have it.

The life members who have been added this spring and who paid $50 each to the treasurer, Harry O. May, are Robert Simpson, W. H. Elliott, Alex. J. Guttman, A. E. Asmus and Charles Henderson.

A resolution was passed directing the secretary to prepare a bulletin of the proceedings of the last annual meeting and exhibition and secure specimens of suitable certificates of merit and certificates of life membership.

ROSENFELD'S PEONY FIELDS.

The accompanying illustrations serve to give an idea of the popularity of the peony in the west. The pictures were soil is rich and peonies do splendidly in it. He has a list of 640 varieties, including many of western origin. He says that Mme. Crousse is the most beautiful of all pure white peonies.

Mr. Rosenfield says this is the first year in twenty that his peonies failed to give some flowers for Memorial day. The officinalis variety will bloom in June for the first time here. They usually come out May 10 or 15. The weather is still quite cold for this time and the bulk of the peonies will not bloom until about June 15 to 25, or nearly three weeks late. Spring trade was unusually good with him.

Thrips.

In answer to J. F. A.'s communication on remedy for thrips, which I read in the REVIEW of May 23, I would say: Give the rose house a thorough cleaning of all dead leaves and decayed matter. Then take a peck of slaked lime and sift it through a fine sieve and mix with two pounds of sulphur; then sift both through the sieve again. Then dust the made last June, at the peony farm of J. F. Rosenfield, West Point, Neb. The two larger illustrations are views in opposite directions, showing a panorama of the grounds devoted to peonies and serving to give an idea of their extent. The other picture shows a section devoted to growing cut flowers. These plants are set in rows five feet apart and are three feet apart in the rows. The plants had been set for two years at the time the picture was taken. Mr. Rosenfield says that by the time they are four years old they will have become so large that they will practically fill the space, leaving only a narrow walk between the rows. The picture serves to show how his fields of peonies are protected by evergreen windbreaks. The roses heavily through a bellows twice a week; if badly infected, repeat for two or three weeks, spraying alternate days. I have found this a sure method of killing thrips.

White Fly Destroyer.

We note the letter of F. A. Waite, on page 11 of the REVIEW, and would like to say that we have had an extensive trade and sold many carloads of White Fly Destroyer to the orange growers in Florida, but have done no great amount of experimenting and never have recommended it as a greenhouse insecticide. However, during the last six months the greenhouses at Fairmount park, Philadelphia, have been placed at our disposal for experimenting and we have been conducting a series of experiments at that place, which have proven more or less satisfactory, although we have not a detailed report on them as yet. In other places florists have tried our preparation with the same success as Mr. Waite. In Louisiana, particularly, they have had most satisfactory results in greenhouse work. We expect to make a great many experiments with some different insecticides for greenhouse work in the next year and shall be pleased if florists who experiment with our products, as did Mr. Waite, will reports results.

Gas Too Strong.

Many writers have recommended hydrocyanic acid gas as a destructive agent for white fly. The formula frequently given is: One pint of water, one pint of sulphuric acid, and two and one-half ounces of cyanide potassium, to each 1,000 cubic feet of air. I made a trial of it last week in one house and am very thankful that I did not use it in the others of my place.

The house is 15x52, walls four feet and ridge ten feet; a total of 5,460 cubic feet. I used the formula as above in five lots and five jars placed in different spots through the house, allowing a half portion in a sixth jar for the odd 460 cubic feet. I have not seen it stated what should be the condition of the house when the gas is liberated; whether wet or dry. In my case, and in the absence of information, the house was dry. The ventilators were closed and the white fly was treated to the gas bath through the night. In the morning there were no flies to be seen; they had been sure enough killed; but the contents of the house were a sight. Salvia and cosmos were all burned up. Cockscomb was scorched and withered. The leaves of geraniums were yellow on the edges, and since have dropped. Ivy geraniums were killed, and even spears of grass in the benches were dried up and withered. It was a pretty expensive experiment for me, happening, as it did, when the plants were all ready for the market.

Before I make further experiments with hydrocyanic acid gas I am desirous of learning why I met with such disastrous results. Should the house have been wet? If so, it would seem that a very important part of the directions is usually omitted. That others may not have my experience it would seem desirable that the formula be overhauled and amended, for I am unable to see in what particular I failed to follow directions.

WINDOW GARDENING.

The National Council of Horticulture does not recommend the extensive use of window-boxes, except in crowded, downtown districts, or on apartment houses and hotels, where they are effective in relieving the monotony of otherwise bare windows and verandas. Where it is possible, however, to grow the hardy types of climbers in the ground, they will be found far superior to boxes planted in the window or on the veranda.

A window-box should never be less than six inches deep. It should be made of $\frac{3}{8}$ -inch lumber and should conform in shape to the window or veranda to which it is attached. It is important to see that the box has good drainage. Holes of good size should be drilled in the bottom, about eighteen inches apart, and these covered with some loose material before putting in the soil. Use rather light soil, and preferably that which has been made open with plenty of cow manure. Heavy clay soil has a tendency to become hard and unfit for plants if allowed to become at all dry.

THE DEATH ROLL.

John A. Keller.

John A. Keller, one of the foremost business men of Lexington, Ky., died June 1 at his residence, 123 E. Sixth street. He was born at Island Richineau, Lake Constance, Germany, in the year 1837. He came to America in 1868 and immediately went to Nicholasville, Jessamine county, where he stayed until removing to Lexington in 1877. He was an ardent lover of nature and spent his life among flowers, but his love was not confined alone to flowers, as he was one of the most charitable men in this city. For twenty-five years he was one of the most prominent florists in his city, and is survived by a wife and eight children, as follows: James C. Keller and Ford J. Keller, and Misses Mary, Lena, Josephine, Louise, Theodore and Mrs. Ed. Norton, all of whom were present at the time of his death.

Peter Pontrich.

Peter Pontrich, of Louisville, Ky., died last week of consumption and funeral services were held at the home day afternoon, May 25, after a brief illness. Mr. Spiess was born in Aschenfeld, Sulzbach Landgericht Bieran, Germany, seventy-four years ago. He came to this country in 1853 and made his home in Buffalo. Two years later he married Anna Rupprecht, the eldest daughter of Andrew Rupprecht, whom he survived. For fifteen years he successfully conducted a florists' business on Peach street, retiring in 1886 and turning the business over to his son, John Spiess, Jr.

He is survived by one daughter, Mrs. Frederick Fox, and two sons, John, Jr., and Andrew Spiess.

TEILMANN'S IDEALS.

The accompanying illustrations show what is Gunnar Teilmann's idea of well-grown geraniums. The single specimen is a 4-inch plant and is an average sample of those he is using in his bedding out this season. The house shown in the other illustration contains about 2,500 plants in 4-inch and 5-inch pots. The majority are S. A. Nutt, for he finds red in much the greatest demand for bedding. Altogether he has grown about 7,000 3-inch, 4-inch and 5-inch geraniums for the season's business and reports the local demand better than ever. The 4-inch stuff is stocky and vigorous and carries from one to four trusses of bloom or buds.

BOSTON.

Memorial Day Trade.

Never has Boston seen such a Memorial day demand for flowers. The backward season made outdoor flowers, which are the main reliance of many, unusually scarce, and the cold, cloudy weather prevented any glut of indoor stock. At the commission dealers' and the markets a veritable famine existed on May 28 and 29 and not nearly enough flowers were forthcoming for the demands.

Roses did not advance much, from $1 to $2 per hundred extra being asked. Short and medium-stemmed stock was in heavy demand, Beauty, Richmond, Maid and anything with color having first call, but everything went with a rush.

Carnations had a veritable boom and realized better prices on the whole than at Easter. From $4 to $8 per hundred were current prices; a few sold higher and thousands more could have been disposed of. Some growers who had promised to deliver flowers at $5 per hundred were caught short and had to give $6 and $7 for stock to fill their orders. Very ordinary Queen made $6 May 29 at the wholesale markets. Far less flowers were forthcoming than had been expected, all growers having heavy local calls to satisfy.

Sweet peas made 75 cents per hundred. Spiraea Japonica was abundant at 50 cents a bunch, but much more could have been sold. Stock of all colors sold well, as did feverfew, marguerites, antirrhinums, candytuft and similar stock. Narcissus poeticus was in good supply, but tulips were rather scarce. Anyone who could have come in with a big lot of late flowering tulips, like Gesneriana, could have got big money for them. Lilium longiflorum made $2 per dozen. Gladioli, of the Gandavensis type, were not plentiful at $2 per dozen. Bride and Blushing Bride were in fair supply. Lilac was only in moderate supply and indoor valley was reinforced by a good outdoor cut. Everything, however, sold and Boston never had such a thorough cleaning up for Memorial day, which has now eclipsed Easter in importance for the average florist.

Since Memorial day, prices have taken a considerable drop, but the continued cool weather prevented any glut in the market, although receipts have increased, particularly of outdoor flowers, as the days have warmed up. Bedding plant trade is more active, but promises to be very slow and dragging this season.

Lumsden Incorporates.

The Lumsden Floral Co., of Belmont, has been incorporated, with $80,000 authorized capital. The incorporators and officers are: President and manager, David Lumsden; treasurer, Thomas F. Fiske; secretary, Fred M. Goodwin. The company will go extensively into growing pot plants for the Boston market, making palms and ferns a specialty, and has excellent prospects.

Various Notes.

At the next meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club, on June 18, C. H. Totty, president of the New York Florists' Club, will speak on "The Past, Present and Future of the Chrysanthemum." There will undoubtedly be a record-breaking attendance to hear Mr. Totty. Other attractions for the same evening are being planned.

Welch Bros. state that their Memorial day business was thirty-five per cent heavier than during any previous year. They never experienced such a demand for flowers.

The mean temperature for May was 6 degrees below the normal. We only had seven clear days during the month and snow fell as late as May 28. June so far has not given us any hot waves, but the weather bureau continues to promise us "fine and warmer" conditions, which we hope may soon be realized. June 2 gave a mean temperature of 45 degrees, with a heavy rain falling all day.

Mr. Carbone has opened a fine new store on Boylston street for the display of his Italian and other imported pottery ware, in which he does an increasingly large trade.

H. M. Robinson & Co. report that Society, at Ithaca, on June 18. Peonies in this section look uncommonly well, the cool, moist weather being to their liking.

S. J. Goddard's cut flower trade was forty per cent in advance of last year's for Memorial day. His local business was heavy.

R. T. McGorum had a fine crop of Bride and Maid roses for Memorial day, shipping 5,000 on one day to Welch Bros.

James H. Cheyne, until recently with the Schlegel & Fottler Co., is now representing the Stumpp & Walter Co., of New York, in New England.

Alex. Montgomery reports a phenomenal demand for roses the last week. From the Waban Conservatories there was an extra large cut, medium and short-stemmed Beauties and anything with color being in great request.

Quite a number of Dutch bulb travelers have been with us of late. All report bulbs as being unusually fine and business good, any falling off in purchase for forcing being more than counterbalanced by heavy increases for outdoor planting.

C. B. Johnson's new dark pink seedling carnation is still coming in fine shape to Welch Bros. It has a long, stiff stem, holds its color well and has an excellent odor. It is one of the most floriferous varieties we have ever seen growing.

H. M. Robinson & Co. continue to do a fine trade in gardenias, of which they receive daily shipments from near-by florists.

J. T. Butterworth has had a fine season with Cattleya Mossiae and will have good cuts of other seasonable orchids, including some fine C. gigas.

W. N. CRAIG.

NORTH BALTIMORE, O.—Some time ago S. M. Hartman sold his stock of plants to J. J. Waaland, of Findlay, and retired from business. He now has sold the greenhouses to A. W. Turner and C. A. Keller.

MEMORIAL DAY.

Memorial day this year took its place in the front rank of flower holidays. In practically every wholesale market the volume of business, at least so far as the quantity of stock handled is concerned, exceeded even the best records for Easter or Christmas. In some markets the money aggregate of sales exceeded the figures for these greatest of flower holidays. The retail trade was immense.

For the last half dozen years there has been a steady increase in the business done for Memorial day. There was a time when the observance of the day was left entirely to the old soldiers, but the custom of decorating the graves of departed loved ones in the glad spring season is so commendable that it has been adopted by thousands of families who had no share in the saving of the Union. The result is that the morning of May 30 sees hundreds of persons visiting every little cemetery in every hamlet in the land. In some seasons many of them use dooryard flowers, and their memorial profits the florist nothing; but in any event a certain proportion patronize the flower store and this year, with practically no outdoor flowers available in that part of the country where the occasion is most generally observed, brought a run upon the florists which was beyond all anticipation. The retailers must first feel the demand before it reaches the wholesale markets. Prices were high as compared with other Memorial days, for the widest observance of the day is dependent upon moderate costs. Many local florists who produce practically all they sell, found themselves compelled to call upon wholesale markets and found they could handle the high-priced stock at a good profit, so urgent was the retail demand.

Although Decoration day has taken a place in the front rank of flower holidays, it must not be anticipated that we soon shall have another like the one just passed. Its like will not be seen again until we have another year of unseasonable weather, with outdoor flowers as scarce as they were this year. But, nevertheless, the importance of Memorial day to the cut flower trade is second only to Easter and Christmas.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

Friday, May 31, saw stiff prices, for business was excellent in all the wholesale houses, the buying by both local and outside retailers showing that they had sold out the heavy purchases for Memorial day and were starting into June with clean houses. Saturday also was brisk, but there was weakness in the price of carnations, for the day's receipts left considerable quantities to carry over for Sunday.

Monday brought another big run of shipping and a fair local business, but receipts were heavy in all lines, so that there was a perceptible weakening, most pronounced in carnations, which seem to be just coming into the big spring crop; they threaten to become a decided glut with the first few days of real summer weather. It already is necessary to clean house by means of cheap sales to thousand-lot buyers.

The rose market presents a different aspect. While prices are expected to quickly run down to the summer basis, many growers are throwing out stock to replant and some houses are therefore not heavily supplied. Others are cutting good quantities of fine roses. Both the best grade and the shorts sell well; it is the medium lengths that go slow. New Beauties are in.

Peonies are not in large supply this week; only the fag end of the southern crop is coming in. As soon as the local cut begins there will be plenty, for the plants are said to be looking fine. With valley, lilies and other flowers the market is well supplied. Some growers report the sweet peas about over, but others still are cutting heavily; peas never have sold better than this season.

Asparagus strings are scarce, but other greens are abundant.

All indications point to a good June business, the principal demand coming the first of the week, as it always does when weddings furnish a large part of the business.

Memorial Day.

If there is anyone who was not pleased with the Memorial day business, he has not made himself heard. Advance orders were in many cases taken at prices below those that ruled while the stock was in the wholesale houses, and there was some complaint from those who had failed to protect themselves, but as soon as the retailers found out how readily the public accepted the inevitable, they bought freely at the best prices this market ever saw for May 28, 29 and 30. There were periods of weakness, especially in carnations, but prices were held more evenly than usual at a holiday. Practically every house had all it could do, or more, and the aggregate of sales sets a new high record for Memorial day for practically every house in this market. The orders were not only more numerous than usual but were larger than ever, for which the skipping of spring is to be given credit.

A few days before the shipping began it was feared that there would be a decided shortage of stock, but the growers did their duty nobly, greatly to their own profit, and tremendous quantities of material were poured into the market for forty-eight hours. Of course there were few outdoor flowers, but it was the salvation of the market, for with the usual quantity of outdoor stuff, and the reduction in demand it would have meant, the market surely would have been glutted. Peonies went to $1.50 a dozen, practically all good bunches selling at that price on Wednesday. There was a tremendous call for carnations, and prices were both steady and high, but nevertheless when all the graves had been decorated several wholesalers shut up shop Thursday afternoon with some thousands of white carnations in the cool rooms. Many shipping orders were cut or turned down Tuesday, but the receipts never could be described as light.

There were large supplies of roses and all other indoor flowers, and they all cleared well. The receipts of sweet peas were especially heavy. Lilies were abundant. There was a big call for greens, especially common ferns, and prices up to $6 a thousand were reported; regular customers were asked $5 for good ferns.

The wholesalers one and all agree that Memorial day gave them a more strenuous time than either Christmas or Easter. The quantity of stock handled was larger and in many instances the sales foot up a greater amount. As an illustration of what happened, one house reports opening on the morning of May 28 with thirty-five orders on file for the day; by night they had dispatched ninety-four orders, most of them large. Not anywhere near all were filled in full. Is it strange that local buyers complained that they were not listened to with the usual show of respect that day?

With such a pressure on the market it is not to be wondered at that about the only point on which all agree is that it was a big business. One house could do little on orders for one item, while another was well supplied. There was no time to go out to pick up stock, and no time to wait on a wholesaler if he came; in fact, the rush was pretty well over before any house knew where it stood. Consequently reports do not tally very closely.

One pleasing feature was that the quality of stock improved rapidly in the few days preceding Memorial day; it saved much complaint.

The Telephone Ordinance.

The wholesale florists are opposed to the proposed telephone ordinance and look to Alderman Peter Reinberg, who is a member of the council committee considering it, to see that their interests are protected. Under the proposed ordinance, the wholesale florists will be obliged to limit themselves to an average of nine and a fraction outgoing calls a day, including Sundays and holidays, or pay an increase in rates. There is no wholesaler who does not use his phone, out-going, more than ten times a day. Twenty calls a day for 365 days will first three miles. First is O. J. Friedman's, at Van Buren street, where Beaumont, formerly with Mangel, Moscow, and at one time in business for himself on the north side, fills Joe Curran's old place.

Hauswirth is just fitting up the new store on the avenue side of the Annex, the marble people having been slow in getting out the material for his box.

C. A. Samuelson, in the Lexington hotel, had a good May and says June starts well. His only regret is that so large a part of the business this spring has been funeral work; he much prefers weddings. A good customer's death may mean a big order, but it's the last one, while a wedding job is only a beginning.

W. J. Smyth, at Thirty-first street, has had a splendid season. May 31 he had the work for the fashionable Loring school, where a big class and all the ushers carried bouquets of lilac.

Muir, at Thirty-fifth street, spent $5,000 last autumn in rebuilding the store, so that it now has the largest window display space of any store in town. Since the improvement, business there has run ahead of the fine new store at Forty-seventh and Grand. Mr. Muir says he pushed plants successfully for Memorial day, cut flowers were so high. It is the old holiday story over again, but the first time we ever heard it of May 30.

Records Broken.

In practically every wholesale house a new record was set for Memorial day business, and E. C. Amling says his books show that: The sales for Tuesday, May 28, were the largest for any single day in his business career; the week of May 26 to June 1 beat all other weeks since his start, and May, 1907, exceeded every other month in the ten years he has been at it, not excepting Christmas or Easter in any calculation.

this country. At Paris the best stores outclassed anything he has seen in this country. He says that the prices of roses at retail at Paris are about what they are in this country. Violets are much cheaper and other stock slightly so. The roses are not nearly so long-stemmed as those grown here, but the buds are larger, the varieties being all more or less unfamiliar to those who know few roses except those forced in America. Mr. Bassett says it is a revelation to see the quantities of stock handled at Covent Garden, London, in the early hours of the morning. He found it worth getting up before daylight several mornings to see how the business is handled there. The majority of the stock is in pots and he thought the prices should be fairly remunerative.

Weather in May.

Among other new records made in May was one for unseasonable weather.

It was the coldest May in twenty-five years; 52 degrees mean temperature, against 60 degrees last year and an average of 56 degrees going back as far as the weather bureau has existed. We had a warm winter, but the cold spring has practically evened the score. The rainfall was about normal. There were twelve cloudy days and nine partly cloudy.

Various Notes.

There was a meeting of the executive committee of the Horticultural Society at the Union for supper Monday night. Plans for the fall show were discussed and the report of the committee on premium list was accepted. The preliminary schedule will be out in a few days.

Last Sunday afternoon a tall, dignified gentleman, bearing a striking resemblance to Andrew McAdams when he is enjoying the best of health, strolled from ball game to ball game in the big field of Washington park, looking for a team in gray suits with "C. F." on the shirts. He would have found them sooner had he not begun with the games surrounded by the smaller numbers of spectators, for the "C. F." players, few of whom seemed to note the gentleman's resemblance to the dean of the south side florists, were putting up a good fight and had a big crowd. Unfortunately at a critical point the other team questioned the score and the contest was not concluded.

The Market.

Never before have we had such spring weather, often two or three varieties crowded into the space of a few hours. There is a scarcity of stock of all kinds, particularly carnations, and flowers for funeral work, of which there is a great deal at present.

Roses are good quality flowers, but much mildew is noticeable on the foliage. Price ranges from 3 cents to 8 cents. The quality of carnations is good, especially white and Enchantress. Owing to the scarcity of this favorite flower the price hovers around 3 cents and 4 cents; even at this figure they sell at sight. Sweet peas are good and are disposed of in large quantities. The price for the longer grades runs from 75 cents to $1 per hundred. Snapdragons, tulips, stocks—in fact, any fairly good flowers—meet with a ready demand, owing to the scarcity of stock. Lilies are in good demand. Valley is also in big demand, selling readily at from 3½ cents to 4½ cents. The quality is exceptionally fine. Smilax is again appearing in larger quantities. Southern fancy ferns are in fairly good supply. Asparagus, both Sprengeri and plumosus, can be had in large quantities.

Decoration Day.

In former years there was little doing in the line of cut flower sales on Memorial day in this city, but things were different this year. Owing to the prevailing cool weather, there was a scarcity of outdoor stock; then, again, outdoor planting was away back, so people who wanted their friends' or relatives' graves trimmed had to fall back on cut flowers. No one had anticipated the demand there was for flowers of all kinds. Prices were away up on every salable article, and with most florists about everything was cleaned up by Thursday morning.

Various Notes.

Charles Tuson, the Windsor florist, had a good wedding order last week. The bride carried valley and white roses. The three bridesmaids carried bouquets of white and lavender lilacs, tied with ribbon to match. The church was prettily decorated with spiræas, marguerites, palms, etc. Arches were made with Asparagus Sprengeri.

Sullivan's staff has been kept busy making confirmation wreaths the last few Saturdays. The price of these is gradually getting to where it should be in order to make a reasonable profit. Most of the florists will not touch one under $1.50, while with several $2 is the minimum.

After July 1 the United States Express Co. will handle packages to the suburban towns over the lines of the Detroit United Railway. H. S.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The current week, beginning May 30 and ending June 5, has been one of the busiest of the season in the cut flower market. Quality has been unusually high for summer, a word that really does not apply to the kind of weather we have experienced lately. Quantity has been somewhat reduced by the continued absence of sunshine and outdoor flowers have been seriously retarded, and in some cases ruined by the late frosts and heavy rains. These conditions combined account for the brisk, almost buoyant market.

Prices advanced slightly for Decoration day. Peonies and carnations were unequal to the demands made upon them. Fancy blooms of Festiva maxima realized $2.50 per dozen, 50 cents more than at the corresponding period last season. All peonies in good condition brought from $8 to $10, and occasionally $12 per hundred. Some stock received was not salable. Carnations were fine. Good ordinary stock brought from $3 to $4 a hundred, while some fancies reached $5 and even $6. These prices are nearly double those of last year at the close of May.

The shortage in peonies and carnations had a stimulative effect on the rest of the market, the shorter grades of roses being in excellent demand at $3 and $4 a hundred. It was rather difficult to find enough of the cheaper grades of flowers, such as are used in loose bunches for cemetery decoration, snowballs, spiræa, deutzia, and kindred shrubbery being reinforced by the wild lupinus, which I believe is a novelty in this market, and one that proved most acceptable under existing conditions.

Good judges estimate that the Decoration day business rivaled that of Christmas and of Easter, and was more satisfactory than either. I do not mean by this to say that the volume of business in dollars and cents was larger on May 30 than at Christmas or at Easter, but that quite as many flowers were marketed, and that the cool weather did much to keep the stock above the market requirements.

Friday was quiet, but Saturday, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday were full of activity, due to weddings, commencements, and other social festivities. Outdoor sweet peas have made their appearance, and are a welcome addition. The prices on these flowers are exceptionally good. Cattleyas are becoming scarcer. C. Mossiae bids fair, however, to grace many June weddings yet to come. This variety was selling at 35 cents to 40 cents each and was nearly over at this time last year. To-day it brings 50 cents to 60 cents per flower and is still in full crop. Lælias are about done. Gardenias, when of good quality, are in demand. Valley is barely able to keep pace with the heavy demand now setting in. Carnations have fallen a trifle since May 30. Smilax has been a rather slow seller at times. It is anticipated that the full crop of local peonies will not be in before next week. Roses are fine, Beauties especially so.

Possibilities.

One of our local growers describes his experiences with bedding plants a few years ago in a way that suggests the possibilities of marketing stock quickly.

"Decoration day had passed and I had four or five houses of flowering plants left, besides some more in the frames. It was important to close these plants out at some price, as the season was over and every day's labor spent on them was time lost, to say nothing of the next crop that needed the space. After thinking over the matter, I filled a small basket with twelve 3-inch pots of verbenas, geraniums, vines, etc., nearly all in bloom, and took my sample down to Jonnimaker's and offered it at 37½ cents. The buyer there was much impressed with my basket and asked me how many I could furnish like it. I told him my quantity. He told me to send him 1,500 basketfuls on Monday, beginning my delivery early.

"It was then Saturday afternoon. I struck trouble at the start, for the basket stores were closed. I finally found one where I bought enough for a good start. We worked late that night and all day Sunday carrying out plants, knocking them out of the pots and filling the baskets. I kept at it all Sunday night and by six o'clock Monday morning two double teams loaded down with baskets were on their way to Jonnimaker's. The two teams had not returned before the buyer had me on the telephone to know whether there were more baskets on the road, as the two loads were all sold! The instant they got back we loaded them up again. Then the drivers kicked. They had gone early, without their breakfasts, to oblige me. 'Did I want to kill them?' they asked. I hustled them down to the house to get something to eat, then got them off again. We worked hard filling these baskets all day Monday and all Monday night. On Tuesday morning the buyer called me up to say that unless delivery of the 1,500 baskets could be finished that day he would call the sale off. We put in everything, with or without bloom, but could not anywhere near finish the order that day! It seems Jonnimaker had advertised a special sale at 50 cents a basket. People crowded around the wagons eager to take the baskets of plants before they could reach the display counter."

PHIL.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Never since the days of Noah has such a run of weather afflicted humanity in the east. Think of a snow storm June 2. George Saltford, the violet authority, is the reliable foundation of the record in the Bronx and up in the Catskills, only an hour away, the mountains are covered with snow, while all over Long Island and Jersey, where the market gardeners provide for the vegetable necessities of the New Yorkers, vegetation is retarded and much replanting has been made necessary. All day Sunday and until nightfall Monday a cold rain continued. The effect of such climatic conditions upon business can be readily imagined. The great summer resorts around New York are in despair.

Business for Memorial day was excellent. Prices of cut flowers were not unreasonably advanced and until Saturday night the increase in values was maintained. In fact, on Monday of this week some special Beauties sold at 25 cents each and Bride and Maid at 8 cents. Large shipments were made to adjoining towns and cities for Decoration day and carnations especially were in demand. Splendid prices were paid readily. On Monday the inevitable movement toward summer rates began. The top for carnations receded from 5 cents to 3 cents. Ford Bros. handle from 10,000 to 12,000 carnations daily. Over 7,000 reached them Saturday from a single grower. There are about fifty wholesalers in New York. The estimating as to volume of business is not a difficult task with these figures as a basis. Victory maintains its grand quality and is as strong and brilliant as at the height of the winter season.

Cold weather has held the society loungers in the city. Every evil has its recompense. The law of averages may be depended on. A year ago the low prices for cut flowers began before the end of April. Here we are in June with almost winter prices.

dogwood, hydrangeas and roses. The list of June weddings in the society columns of the big dailies is an inspiration. The outlook for the florists is roseate, for there are enough of these interesting functions listed to give every retailer his share. Young & Nugent had a brilliant affair, at Tuxedo, last week. Out of town weddings are many and New York retailers get them all, or nearly all.

Andrew Wilson, of Summit, N. J., had a beauty last week. Mr. Wilson has the only retail store in Summit and does a large local trade, in addition to his plant oil manufacture. Of the latter he sends out quantities daily, all the large growers using it and orders for as high as 100 gallons at a time being received.

Frank McVaugh has rented the Binsted place, at Summit, N. J., next to the plant of John N. May. He will devote the three houses to carnations.

Down at C. H. Totty's I found that genial chrysanthemum expert overwhelmed with orders and shipments and sending out his novelties to every part of the continent and to the Orient as well. His rose stock is also superb and there is no limit to the growing demand for his specialties.

Next door, Bobby Schultz was putting the old Hart place in shape for his expert rose culture and completing his planting as rapidly as the backward season will allow. Evidences of adept cultivation of the grape may always be depended on here.

A glimpse of Arthur Herrington indicated an additional avoirdupois that speaks volumes for his celery and other products and for the success of his new enterprises.

For mutual protection an association of the principal plant growers in and around New York has been formed and incorporated with its office in New York City, to be known as the New York and New Jersey Association of Plant Growers. The directors include A. L. Miller and John Scott, of Brooklyn; Louis Dupuy, of Whitestone; H. D. Darlington, of Flushing; H. Schoeltzel, of New Durham, with the following officers: President, Anton Schultheis, of College Point; vice-president, F. L. Atkins, ing most of their holiday to Germany, Holland and Switzerland.

Some of the politicians are in trouble over Bronx park revelations and there is considerable adverse criticism over the abuse of patronage.

On July 2, the date of the New York Florists' Club's outing, Mr. and Mrs. Anton Schultheis, of College Point, will sail for Europe for their annual holiday. Others of Mr. Schultheis' family will accompany him.

Reed & Keller's latest novelty is called cape cloth and is a great convenience for florists who use cape flowers as a background for lettering. The cape flowers are attached to a special kind of prepared cloth and this can be cut in any size that is desired. If Mr. Reed discovers and patents perpetual motion, no one who knows him will be greatly surprised.

Isaac Isaacs, of Twenty-eighth street and Eighth avenue, was the only florist to win a prize in the work-horse parade Decoration day.

John Seligman & Co. are making roses a specialty, having added lately some expert growers to their shipping force. Mrs. Seligman also manifested interest in her husband's prosperity and added last week an American Beauty to the assets of the firm. Mother and daughter are doing well.

Samuel A. Woodrow has decided to undertake the wholesale palm business on his own account and has located at 53 West Thirtieth street. Mr. Woodrow has had some ten years' experience with palms and plants, having been assistant gardener at J. J. Astor's private place at Rhinebeck and assistant foreman at Charles Stewart Smith's place at Stamford, Conn. Later he has been associated with William Starke, of West Twenty-ninth street.

avenue, have a branch store at West End, Long Branch, N. J. This firm had the large order for the Schaeffer family there last week, over $2,000 worth of designs being used to fill the many orders. Several members of the family were burned to death.

The New York Florists' Club will hold its last meeting for the season next Monday evening, June 10, at the Hotel Earlington, on West Twenty-seventh street. The outing program will be distributed and several matters of interest discussed. A large attendance is requested.

Charles F. Cuhe has filled his three new 200-foot houses at West Hoboken, N. J., with rose stock from Totty and Schultz, of Madison. Joseph S. Fenrich will look after the New York end of the enterprise.

E. Bonnetti, of Jersey City, returned last week from Paris.

Jacob Davis and Miss Minnie Sickles will be married Sunday, June 9, and spend their honeymoon in New England. Mr. Davis has been bookkeeper for W. H. Donohoe and M. A. Bowe.

Business during the afternoons of July and August is always at a standstill. There has been some talk of closing the wholesale houses during the hot months at 1 p. m. Even now many of the leading wholesalers find opportunity for recreation and itinerancy early in the afternoons. The days of quietude and retrospection are drawing near.

The Market.

Decoration day business was a great deal better than expected. The leading retailers say it was much better than last year and that this day hereafter will be looked forward to as one of our busy days. A great deal of shipping to neighboring towns was done the day before. The wholesalers, too, were kept busy all morning filling orders. Stock was plentiful enough, but the orders ahead cleaned up almost everything in sight, with an increase in price on roses and carnations. In the afternoon the wholesalers closed up, but not so with the retailers. The greenhouse man, too, experienced a busy day with plants. They say bedding stock is running low and first-class stock of almost everything is scarce. Since Decoration day, at the wholesale houses, stock of good quality has not been any too plentiful and prices remain as last Thursday.

In roses there is enough second-class stock in the market. Bride and Maid are somewhat scarce. Some extra fine Richmond, Chatenay and Ivory can be had. Beauties are not extra good, but enough of them.

There are plenty of white carnations, but colored stock has been in demand and is scarce. Lawson is poor. Enchantress, Mrs. Patten, Boston Market, and Lady Bountiful are good. Cardinal is the best red.

Peonies and cape jasmine have sold well. Sweet peas are having a big demand. They are plentiful, but the demand makes them look scarce. Plenty of good valley is to be had and it will come in handy for the number of weddings this month. Dagger ferns are now plentiful, as are all other greens.

Various Notes.

Henry Emunds, of Belleville, was over May 31 to spend the day with friends in the trade. Mr. Emunds reports a good trade Decoration day.

N. Bova & Sons, who run a flower stand in Union Market, have bought out James North, at 616 North Vandeventer avenue, where they will continue the business. The sale was made through W. C. Smith & Co.

Fred C. Weber's delivery wagon was in a smash-up with a street car last week. The wagon was badly demolished and the driver badly hurt.

W. C. Smith & Co. disposed of large quantities of tobacco stems last week.

Robert J. Scott, the Schreve avenue florist, reports that he has had a busy season in planting and is almost sold out of everything.

A. Schroeter, a florist on South Broadway, has pulled up stakes and has left.

D. I. Bushnell and C. Nichols, of the St. Louis Seed Co., and Mr. Schisler, of the Schisler-Corneli Seed Co., are making preparations to attend the convention of the American Seed Trade Association, at New York, June 25.

Frank M. Ellis, now of Panama, writes to friends that he is much pleased with his prospects on his banana plantation. His wife is now on her way to visit him. He keeps in touch with his friends by reading the REVIEW every week.

Mr. Carr, who handles the stock of plants of William Schray & Sons, at Union Market, reports good trade, with good stock scarce. Frank Guttman, at the next stand to him, reports about the same.

The florists doing business directly opposite the cemeteries did a rushing business Decoration day and the day before.

SAN ANTONIO, TEX.

May 31 there was heavy hail and the greenhouses suffered, as usual. The Poppea glass fared worst, the loss being about $600. A neighboring florist writes: "Mr. Poppea and his wife are from Belgium. They have been here about seven years and have had hard luck. The Galveston flood swept away all they had accumulated and they moved to San Antonio and began again on River avenue. Mr. Poppea's health was in a bad state and he went to the hospital and underwent a painful and expensive operation. While he was ill his wife kept up the business, and they grew about the best flowers and ferns that I ever saw. I have had my entire stock, and all my glass, twice destroyed by hail, so I know how it feels."

FORT WAYNE, IND.

Miss C. B. Flick is having built at present four large greenhouses, which, added to her other houses, will give a total of 50,000 square feet for providing flowers for the retail store downtown. The four new houses will be devoted entirely to carnations, for which there is always a large demand. The additional room to be secured was much needed, as Miss Flick's retail business is more than local—it extends to neighboring towns and cities. The greenhouses are located at South Wayne.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., Henry W. Wood, Richmond, Va.; First Vice-Pres., Charles Burge, Toledo, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 25th annual meeting will be held at New York City, June 25 to 27, 1907.

THE market gardeners of Chicago and other cities of the central west are wondering where they will land if summer does not materialize before fall.

VISITED CHICAGO:—Frank T. Emerson, former manager of the Western Seed and Irrigation Co., Fremont, Neb. Mr. Emerson is now interested in southern California projects.

THE optimistic wholesaler says that the unfavorable season and the resulting see-sawing in trade was a good thing; it kept in check many of the retailers who are prone to overpurchase and the outcome will be better all around.

NEW YORK:—Seedsmen who are wholly satisfied with the season's business, and who have no kick to register against the weather, and who think that the prospects for the coming seed crop are encouraging will be just as welcome as the others at the coming convention.

CHICAGO:—June 1 is a very late date to see onion seed planted for sets. The growers here, however, are still pushing the drill and have hopes that the acres planted at this late date will pan out all right. Onion seed in 100-pound lots is still being shipped out. It goes to pickle men, who expect to be enabled to harvest a crop from it. In a usual year, seeding that has been done later than May 20 has failed to produce a good crop at this point, but this is an unusual year and perhaps the late seeding will prove satisfactory. The onion set fields that were planted early are holding their own, but the growth is slow and the crop badly needs warmth.

BEANS are reported to be a sort of drug in the market. There has been no bean weather anywhere, apparently, and until the soil warms up growers will take no chances. Peas, on the other hand, being a crop that market growers feel safe in planting, even though the weather is cold, are fairly well cleaned up. Sweet corn has been in good demand for replanting. There has been a good demand for cucumber seed, and the wholesalers are expecting a good call for turnip seed in the near future. Reports generally are to the effect that since the end of March business has not been up to the mark and that on the whole the season

A further and rapid extension of sugar-beet growing is predicted.

IMPORTS.

The imports of seeds through the port of New York for the week ending May 25 were as follows:

Kind.	Bags.	Val.	Kind.	Bags.	Val.
Canary	2,070	$ 3,795	Cummin	1	$ 17

TUBERGEN'S FREESIAS.

A very pretty hybrid freesia was given an award of merit by the Royal Horticultural Society of England on March 6 last year, under the name of Freesia Tubergeni, having been raised by C. Van Tubergen, Haarlem, Holland, from the intercrossing of F. Armstrongi with F. refracta alba. The flowers are lilac-rose, with a lighter throat, and pleasantly scented, though scarcely to the same extent as those of its last-named parent. It appears to be of good constitution, and promises to be a valuable addition for greenhouse work. April 16 of this year an award of merit was given to Freesia Tubergeni Amethyst, with larger and rather paler flowers than those of F. Tubergeni, it being a seedling from this last pollinated by F. refracta alba. It promises to be a really good garden plant.

BOLGIANO TALKS.

J. Bolgiano, of J. Bolgiano & Son, Baltimore, recently was called upon to make an address before a school, and chose to tell the pupils how to make the earth beautiful by growing more geraniums on it. He prefaced his remarks with the following quotation:

God might have made the earth bring forth
Enough for great and small,
The oak tree and the cedar tree,
Without a flower at all;
He might have made enough—enough
For every want of ours—
For Luxury, Medicine and Toil,
And yet have made no flowers.

ERFURT SEED TRADE.

It is to be feared that the prospects of the Erfurt seed trade for this year will not be very bright, as we have had a rather long and severe winter. Especially in the month of January we had for a whole week very hard and frosty weather, 15 degrees below zero Fahr., which was all the more detrimental to a good many different plants, cultivated for the production of seed, as the frost just then was not accompanied by a layer of snow.

All the same, a great part of our Erfurt seed producers have succeeded in bringing vegetables, a lot of cauliflowers, cabbages, etc., fairly well through this winter, but nevertheless, great damage has been done to parsnips, carrots, corn salad, leek, chervil, kohlrabi, swedes and cabbages, as most of them are left in the fields over winter unprotected. A good many of our seed growers will have to try their luck with annuals, seeding the same year, in order not to let their fields lie idle.

April was favored with exceptionally fine weather, which permitted a good many growers to plant out cauliflowers by the middle of that month.

As far as the stocks, wallflowers, cinerarias, calceolarias, etc., are concerned, it is now evident that those plants have passed the winter in houses and pits fairly well, and there is every reason to think there is a good outlook for them, provided, of course, the coming summer will be a good one. Many growers had a tough time last winter with their plants to keep them alive, as they are for the most part wintered in pits, and few of them are piped.

DOUBLE TULIPS FOR POTS.

White Murillo is the best of all the double white tulips, and when seen in perfection is as handsome as any semi-double peony. It is pure white and fairly double, and the inside petals curve inwards on one another and form a splendid center. What is important in all double tulips is the strength of the stem, as if it is weak a great deal of tying up is necessary. The stem of this tulip is strong and holds up the bloom without the aid of a stick. The plants grow about ten or twelve inches high.

Safrano or Brimstone, or Primrose Raphael, to give the plant all its aliases, is a tulip of a lovely shade of primrose, shaded with canary yellow, and with a warm rosy flush on some of the petals as it grows older. The Gardeners' Magazine says this reminds one of a Marechal Niel rose. It is a dwarf grower, and has a stiff stem and a flower of medium size. "Worn in a lady's dress in the evening, with

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

Trade last week was fairly good. Many funeral designs were gotten out, while Decoration day was a bright, clear, warm day and the many cemeteries were crowded. All along the roads, crowds carried flowers of every description. Anything was salable. Cut flowers were in steady demand and brought good prices, while pot plants went slowly. Many of the stores are offering the latter at a very low figure. One of our growers is selling his at 3 cents a pot; in fact, anything to get rid of his large stock.

We are again experiencing wintry weather. We had last Saturday hail, snow, wind, rain—almost every kind of weather. Many telephones were put out of commission. Shrubbery was also damaged and trees blown down; bedding plants suffered and business was affected. Many of our market florists Saturday carried nearly as much of their stock home as they brought. However, the outdoor flowers are far short in their supply and we have to depend on the indoor stock mostly. Carnations are beginning to get short in supply. Roses are not too plentiful. Sweet peas are plentiful. Lily of the valley is scarce. Greens are enough to meet the demand.

Club Meeting.

The May meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club, with President F. C. Bauer in the chair, was in every way interesting, with a fairly good attendance. Mr. Lanahan invited the club to visit his country residence, Blenheim, where Mr. Kepplinger is gardener. W. Frazer was present, being president of the Jamestown committee for the club. Isaac H. Moss was appointed president of the bowling team. Special business will be transacted at the next meeting and all members are requested to be present. M. Thau, manager of the Fernery, Govans-town, Md., showed a bunch of his new double white daisy from Queen Alexandra.

Various Notes.

A. G. Fiedler & Co. furnished 3,500 carnations, mostly white, for the St. Mary's church May procession Sunday, May 26.

Lehr Bros. lost by the hail storm 200 boxes of glass, with no insurance.

Martin Duckstein lost about fifteen boxes of glass, partly insured.

G. Morrison, manager at Uplands, has two new greenhouses about completed and will grow roses on a larger scale.

The vegetable gardens of Charles I. James, Catonsville, Md., H. C. Caines, gardener, are certainly a credit to him, being more forward than any I have seen in his section.

Henry Kreasle, gardener at Beechfield, has a fine collection of coleus.

E. A. Woodfall, Glen Burnie, Md., is having considerable trouble with rabbits

THE FLORISTS' REVIEW,
Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:—

In our letter of last week we hinted at plans for increasing our rapidly growing Wholesale Department. One of the lines along which we are working is the Fall Bulb Trade, in which we are making a special feature of Import Prices on orders which are sent to us now.

For Quality our stock cannot be surpassed. The truth of this statement is supported by the fact that our Bulb business has nearly doubled in three years. If this does not show that our customers are pleased with our bulbs, we do not know what would.

If any of your readers want rock-bottom import prices we invite them to send us a list of their wants and get our quotations, or else drop us a postal for our Import Bulb List.

Yours very truly,

W. H. D.—K. JAMES VICK'S SONS.

LAPEER, MICH.—There is much friction between W. H. Watson and D. W. McElroy, the trustee who has charge of the Watson assets in bankruptcy. They have clashed frequently. June 1 Watson locked out the trustee and McElroy broke in with an ax.

EL PASO, ILL.—The El Paso Carnation Co. has purchased the land upon which its greenhouses are now located and will erect two new houses thereon at an early date. This firm has been in business here less than a year, but has built up a large cut flower and lettuce trade, and the erection of the new houses is essential. The manager is C. L. W. Snyder.

SAVANNA, ILL.—J. Y. Lambert says Decoration day business was far in advance of last year. The demand was greatest for carnations, the price not being considered. Few roses were called for, white predominating. Geraniums in bloom were in good demand, few other plants being called for. The out-of-town orders were nearly double what they were last year. Mr. Lambert will build a carnation house this summer, 26x60 feet.

Cold Storage Lilies

All Live and Up-to-date Florists Grow These.

The forcing of cold storage lilies is no longer an experiment. If you have not already grown some of these we can refer you to hundreds of florists who make a success of this method and have lilies "all the year round"—the same as Lily of the Valley.

Our lilies are bought for and placed in cold storage for the express purpose of delivering bulbs in the summer time.

Lilium longiflorum and giganteum take about two months to bloom from time of planting from cold storage; speciosum from five to six months, so that longiflorum wanted for Thanksgiving and Christmas should be planted about Oct. 1, and speciosum and auratum about July 1.

We have limited quantities of the following varieties on hand and offer subject to being unsold and at the prices named. Will hold not later than Oct. 1 for our customers without any additional charges for cold storage. ORDER TODAY.

FLINT, MICH.—D. P. Smith has started the erection of new greenhouses at Lapeer street and Howard avenue.

Vegetable Forcing.

YOUNGSTOWN, O.—T. E. Milliken is having a greenhouse put up on his farm. He intends to go into the business of raising vegetables for the local market. He will have several thousand feet under glass.

IN the beginning Henry Payne, at Hinsdale, Ill., grew vegetable plants in his greenhouses only for early planting in his own garden. But so many towns-people came to him for supplies that he gradually extended his operations and now supplies, not only planters, but local grocers who handle tomato, cabbage, cauliflower plants, etc. The development of the wholesale ended led to taking a contract to supply a Chicago department store that each season retails many thousands of good transplanted plants at a penny each, which leaves a good profit for both grower and store.

VEGETABLE MARKETS.

CHICAGO, June 5.—Cucumbers, 25c to 90c doz.; leaf lettuce, 40c to 45c case.

NEW YORK, June 3.—Cucumbers in liberal supply, generally of only ordinary quality, and dragging at comparatively low prices. Mushrooms in light supply and firm. Tomatoes selling well. Cucumbers, 40c to 50c doz.; mushrooms, 25c to 90c lb.; tomatoes, 15c to 30c lb.

BOSTON, June 3.—The continued cold weather causes hothouse vegetables to sell well. Excepting rhubarb, spinach and a few lettuce, nothing is coming from outdoors yet. Tomatoes are higher. Beets, $1 to $1.50 doz. bunches; carrots, 75c to $1 doz. bunches; lettuce, 50c to $1 doz.; escarolle, $1 doz.; romaine, $1 doz.; parsley, $3 box; tomatoes, 25c to 35c lb.; cucumbers, $2 to $4 box; mushrooms, $2.50 to $3 per 4-lb. basket.

FORCING STRAWBERRY PLANTS.

Kindly tell us how to handle strawberry plants for winter forcing, especially how to get them ready and what varieties are best for the purpose.

F. A. N.

The preparation of strawberries for winter forcing should begin as soon as the young runners are large enough to handle. The best way to insure a strong plant is to plunge 3-inch pots filled with good soil in the strawberry bed, peg a plant from a good, strong runner in the soil in the pot and keep all other runners off by pinching out as soon as they appear. Leave the plants thus until the pots are well filled with roots, when they may be severed from the parent plant and in the course of a few days potted up into larger pots. Set the pots on a bed of ashes or some such material, to prevent the worms from working up into them too freely, and keep well supplied with water. The final shift should be into 6-inch pots, which should be well filled with roots by fall, but do not attempt to force until the plants have had a good freezing. Several varieties adapt themselves to forcing, but a perfect flowered variety is essential. The best we have tried is Nick Ohmer; it seems to produce pollen more freely than most others.

GRAND RAPIDS.

Current Comment.

The spring has been so backward that very little bedding, comparatively, has been done, most people not caring to plant their beds until winter was over, or as a customer put it May 31, "I guess I'll wait till spring." On May 28 there was a hard frost, and from then till after Decoration day there were extremely cold nights without actual frost. At present it is much warmer, although not so warm as it should be. Boxes and baskets are now being delivered without fear of being sent back with the remark, "I'm afraid they will freeze if I put them out now." About 100 miles north of the Rapids there is still six to eight inches of snow on the ground.

Vegetation is backward. Very little, if any, corn and potatoes have as yet been planted. Some late tulip beds are just beginning to bloom. The early varieties got through just before Memorial day, leaving nothing, in the shape of outdoor flowers, for the special event. This condition made the demand for roses and carnations simply phenomenal. Never before, in the history of local florists, have such heavy shipping orders been given, making it a sheer impossibility to even think of attempting to fill them. Orders for 3,000 carnations, in addition to roses, etc., were the most common, while 6,000 and 7,000 lots were simply given the cold shoulder. All orders from regular customers were cut pro rata, as nearly as possible, so as to give all a share, and the agony of making excuses and avoiding promises to fill orders full, "or we will never buy another flower from you," made the cold sweat break out on many a florist's brow. However, the agony is over. The occasion used up every flower of any description, even to old and pickled stock, the latter being made up into cheap cemetery bouquets that would last a day anyway. Plants sold well, everything in bloom going for cemetery work. Geraniums are now getting pretty scarce, and indications point to the fact that this season will see the greatest clean-up of plants in many years.

The total business for Decoration day was about the same as last year, possibly a little more, but handled in a shorter space of time. As a whole it was very satisfactory to all, but if we had had a few days of really warm weather just preceding May 30, the cut of carnations would probably have been double what it was.

From now on the regular bedding trade will be on in full swing and will doubtless run right into July.

John Myers died recently, aged 45 years. He was for the past four years in the employ of the Crabb & Hunter Floral Co. He was a valued florist and will be sadly missed by all who knew him. Formerly he worked for Henry Smith and also for the Grand Rapids Floral Co.

A FASCIATE ESCHSCHOLTZIA.

Horticulturists are deeply interested in a unique specimen of the Eschscholtzia Californica, our state flower, which has been sent to E. J. Wickson, the botanist of Berkeley, by G. W. Dwinell, of Montague, Cal. The flower is the result of the union of about six stems, which, having grown together, unite to form a blossom, the petals of which are grouped into three distinct flowers. The calyxes also are transformed into scalloped extensions. Mr. Wickson has spent much time studying this wonderful new growth and gives as his opinion that the tendency to fasciation among many varieties of plants is common, but this is the first instance he has seen of the eschscholtzia on this line, and he is inclined to think that a valuable adjunct has been discovered to add to our California flora.

The following letter by Professor Wickson to the discoverer of the plant may be of interest:

The peculiar process represented in the plant sent me is known as fasciation, which being interpreted means a tendency toward bundling or growing in fascies, whence comes the adjective fasciate, meaning bundled or compacted together, long used as Gray uses it, viz.: "Flattened or rendered flat, as some stems through monstrous growth." This phenomenon occurs very widely with different plants. I have seen a branch of a cherry tree flattened to a hand breadth, studded on both sides with buds, showing clearly that the growth consisted of a collection of branches laterally united. Sometimes one sees a shoot of asparagus monstrously broadened by the same process, and stems of the common flower known as cockscomb (celosia) fasciated until it has almost the aspect of a cactus pod.

The specimen which you send is the first I have seen of this behavior on the part of the eschscholtzia. The markings show clearly the combination of the different stems, which have contributed to the doubling of the corolla. Not only that, but an examination of the blossom shows that the petals are grouped in three distinct flowers, all of them doubled as described, and there is also a transformation of the calyxes into scalloped extensions, but the calyx cup is a single oval cavity in which four perfectly formed seed capsules sit side by side in a line. All these things are what might naturally be expected from the condensation of the energy of several stems into one floral effect.

It has been conjectured that this tendency of plants is possibly due to exceedingly favorable growing conditions, but fortunately it is not a thing which often happens, nor am I aware that it has ever been artificially produced. If it were a common result of providing plants with exceptionally good growing conditions, such as our florists resort to, we should have our plants forced into monstrous growths which would transform them almost beyond recognition, and it is of course fortunate that this does not often happen.

CALUMET, MICH.—The Lakeside Floral Co., the reorganized Lutey Floral Co., will abandon the 18,000 feet of glass at Red Jacket, removing the houses and adding them to the main plant at Chasell, for economy of operation.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERMEN.

Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Vice-Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 32d annual convention will be held at Detroit, Mich., June 12 to 14, 1907.

THE nurserymen at Painesville, O., report having escaped serious loss through the late spring frosts that did much damage in Michigan.

THE twenty-fourth annual report of the board of park commissioners of Minneapolis, now being sent out with the compliments of Theodore Wirth, superintendent, is one of the handsomest volumes in the season's output of park literature.

THE Gardner Nursery Co., Osage, Ia., has purchased the George Stokes property for $8,000, the ten acres lying south of the nursery from Carl Svanberg for $1,600, and the ten acres belonging to Mrs. Emma Chute for $1,750; and will proceed to make the increased acreage a part of the nursery.

THE Colorado Nursery Co., Loveland, Colo., has been sold to Monte Kilburn, Dr. Cramer and H. A. Gooch, who expect to incorporate under the name of the Colorado Nursery Co. The former owners, Shields & Noble, have been successful in making this nursery one of the most valuable in the state. Mr. Shields has been in the business at Loveland twenty-six years.

AMERICAN PEONY SOCIETY.

The fourth annual meeting of the American Peony Society is to be held in the new buildings of the New York State College of Agriculture at Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y., June 18 and 19. There are many reasons why this meeting promises to be an interesting and important one. There will be an exhibition of blooms staged in the auditorium of the college, which will represent the best productions of the various growers in the country. Besides this there is an extensive collection of varieties comprising 1,933 lots of one, two or three plants each, growing on the Experiment Station grounds, which have been donated by peony men all over Europe and America. These blooms will be available for study to all those interested. A check-list, including all names ever published with descriptions, and giving references to sources and indicating all pictures, will be available for use at this meeting. Questions of nomenclature bearing upon the authenticity of varieties and the grouping of synonyms will be brought up for discussion.

The society offers its usual list of premiums for displays of cut blooms. The business session will be held on the afternoon of the first day. An address will be given by J. E. Coit, of the college horticultural department, who has had charge of the test collection.

The meeting, coming as it does in commencement week, will give an opportunity to visitors to inspect all buildings of the university, and pleasure parties may be made up to visit some of the many interesting and beautiful waterfalls, gorges and lakes, for which this region is famed.

CAROLINA POPLAR.

There is a considerable scarcity of trees of Carolina poplar in sizes above 2½-inch caliper. In a large measure responsibility for the shortage is due to the real estate booms which have been in progress for the last year or two in several sections of the country, but notably in the east. The Carolina poplar is the real estate boomer's tree par excellence. The nurserymen can afford to sell it at a price below the prices of the same sizes of better trees, because of its rapid growth and because they can plant it with every assurance that it will grow. Again, it makes a fine appearance sooner after planting than almost any other tree, and it is the real estate man's ambition to get his subdivision on the market as quickly as possible.

The Carolina poplar also is excellent for use as a screen. An instance of the way it may be employed is a planting by the Peterson Nursery, Chicago, put in two seasons ago. A certain piece of property backed up to the Illinois Central railroad embankment and the owner wished to shut off the view. The Peterson Nursery planted 3-inch Carolina poplars eight feet apart and trimmed them closely on both the railroad side and property owner's side, with the result of forcing the growth to the untrimmed sides. The branches quickly interlocked and made an impenetrable screen.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS.

Perennials in pots outdoors need careful attention in watering. They will get along with less water if the pots are plunged nearly up to the rims in soil. It facilitates the management of perennials, as well as other kinds of young nursery stock in pots and other movable receptacles, if a place is set apart exclusively for them in the nursery. This disposition of them will also aid visitors in getting, at almost a glance, an impression of the extent of this branch of the grower's ability to fill extensive future orders.

There is a great deal of young nursery stock purchased by growers that they themselves could with advantage produce by propagation. This is especially the case with evergreens. During the summer, when the time is at hand when evergreen cuttings should be put in, the work in nurseries is to a good extent confined to cultivation of the soil and in this work the most skilful of the workmen are not necessarily needed; their time may more profitably be employed in the propagation of nursery stock.

In putting in cuttings of retinosporas there is no need of making them very small. Large cuttings, properly taken care of, will root just as readily as smaller ones, while the gain in size of plants is considerable when eventually they are rooted.

Not only by the methods of seed sowing and cuttings could growers, in greater numbers than at present, produce in their own premises from start to finish the stock they sell, but by grafting also they could produce the choice kinds only obtainable by that method. When a greenhouse is available there is nothing in the whole process of grafting that need prevent any man from attempting it; the main requisite is to have the stocks in good, vigorous condition.

Although rhododendrons may live when planted in bright, sunny locations, they will thrive much better in partially shaded places and in soil which has had at least some leaf-mold dug into it previous to the planting of the rhododendrons.

Hydrangeas that are hopelessly devoid of flower-yielding buds should be planted out in the open field in good soil, where they will make fine plants for another year if, when they are planted in the ground now, they are cut well back. There is a market for the flowers of Hydrangea paniculata and a profit can

BUILDING MATERIAL.

A novel feature in the new catalogue of the John C. Moninger Co., Chicago, is the illustration of a number of its ideas in greenhouse construction by means of blue-prints, printed in the body of the book, but in every way similar to those which are familiar to every builder. There are many other things of interest in the ninety-six nicely printed pages, beginning with the brief history of the firm that faces a picture of the plant. There are only a half dozen pages that are not illustrated and the pictures include halftone reproductions of some of the largest and best known plants in the country, as well as detailed drawings for standard construction. It is a book that will interest every grower and not fail of its mission—to sell greenhouse material.

THE REVIEW will send Smith's Mum Manual for 40 cents.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.—G. Van Bochove & Bro. will not only add considerably to their big range of glass, during the approaching summer, but they will erect a number of residences for parties who have bought lots of them.

THE NEW CARNATION ..AFTERGLOW..

WE beg to announce that we will offer to the trade, the coming season of 1907 and 1908, the new carnation AFTERGLOW, a variety of sterling merit, which is destined to be grown as universally as the Lawson in its time, as it has done exceedingly well wherever it has been tried—in six different sections of the country—the Far East, West and Middle States—and all report it as an "Ideal" commercial variety, grand in every way. It has won the S. A. F. Silver Medal, for the best flower or plant, at the Monthly Exhibition of the Cincinnati Floral Exhibition in 1906, and scored 91 points at quite a number of exhibitions held in different cities in the United States. It has never failed to score wherever shown. It has scored the highest of any seedlings at the exhibition of the American Carnation Society, held at Toronto in 1907, after reaching there twenty-four hours late from Framingham, Mass. In color it is everything that the name implies—a bright rosy cerise. In stem it excels any commercial variety now extant, not excepting Enchantress, being somewhat longer and always rigid. Never weak, in habit it is very vigorous, "a Grower's Delight," as it recuperates very readily after planting from the field; also from the sand. It loses no time in getting to work. AFTERGLOW has been grown for the past season by the undersigned and offered by them.

Orders now booked, to be filled in rotation for well-grown, well-rooted cuttings, at $2.00 per dozen; $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000. ★ ★

INDIANAPOLIS.

The Market.

Weather conditions are still unfavorable for this time of the year and are more suitable for the beginning of April than for June. Planting out is backward, some early ones losing all the soft plants they had out. A great deal of bedding stuff shows the effects of the cold nights and the cold rains we have had during the last week. It is a long lane that has no turn, and no doubt we will soon have more seasonable weather. Here's hoping.

Decoration day was a great day in this city. The demand for flowers was immense and, while prices were higher than last year, everything went and there was not nearly enough stock. There were few peonies and they were greatly missed. All kinds of bouquet flowers were at a premium.

The presence of President Roosevelt in the city added to the enthusiasm displayed and red and pink carnations were much in evidence. The president was entertained at the home of Vice-President Fairbanks, where the floral arrangements were looked after by A. Wiegand & Sons in their best style.

Various Notes.

Baur & Smith have started building another greenhouse 25x360. The posts are set and they will follow their usual method of setting out the plants and building over them, saving the trouble of lifting and replanting in the fall.

The following is from a daily paper: "John Hartje, a pioneer florist of Indianapolis, has retired from a long business career. He will spend the summer at his summer home north of the city and in the early fall will start on a tour of the world." Mr. Hartje recently disposed of his greenhouses to parties at Bloomington, Ind. His many friends will miss him and venture to predict that after his travels he will decide that Indianapolis is good enough for him.

Mr. Afflick, who has been managing greenhouses south of the city, has bought ground and intends to build near New Bethel, eleven miles southeast of town. S.

TROY, OHIO.

Heavy hail fell here May 26. At the Brady nursery years of toil were made of no avail in a few minutes. James Ziegenfelder states that the damage done to his greenhouses amounts to $700. None of the damaged buildings are insured and all of last fall's work as well as the work put in this spring is lost, in addition to the $700 or more of glass broken. Jesse Eidemiller has been tending the Ziegenfelder gardens on the half share plan and all of his work is lost also. Mr. Ziegenfelder says that out of sixty-five boxes of glass which are required to cover the building only five cases remain unbroken. The damage done to the largest of his houses is so great that no attempt will be made to rebuild it. The others will be rebuilt at once.

MORGANTOWN, W. VA.

In speaking of last week's business W. R. P. Stewart said: "Our Decoration day business was good; nearly double what it was last year. Bedding stock had the call, but cut stock a close second, with Pittsburg wholesale houses unable to fill orders for roses and carnations. I had a nice bunch of multi-florum lilies that I disposed of to good advantage. We run our prices the same the whole season through, as we figure that it does not cost any more to grow stock for florists' big days than at any other times. I think that the time is coming that all florists will see it in that light and will sell more stock the season through and realize a better profit than by going to the two extremes, extremely high and very low prices, below cost of production."

ELMIRA, N. Y.

The work of enlarging the plant of the United States Cut Flower Co. in Elmira Heights is fast nearing completion and United States Marshal W. R. Compton stated, a few days ago, that by June 15 it is expected the new greenhouses will be ready for planting.

The progress of the work has been remarkable. After the company decided to enlarge the plant, material was ordered and April 15 the construction work was begun. A total of eighteen greenhouses, just doubling the size of the mammoth plant, are now being finished and the company will soon have a total of 150,000 square feet of glass.

The new greenhouses adjoin those which were first constructed. They are the Lord & Burnham truss construction, the same as the four last added.

The heating plant was constructed so that it would be efficient for an increased plant and no additions will be built to this plant.

VINCENNES, IND.

Early in the evening of May 26 a hail storm passed over this section. An accounting next day showed that Paul Schultz had lost 600 lights of glass. W. A. Reiman counted up 2,500 broken lights. John Freize had 7,000 panes broken, and at the establishment of Charles Raker not one single light of glass was left unbroken. None of these was insured.

ASTERS.

ROSBACH'S COMMERCIAL LATE.

We have been growing and perfecting this strain for the past five years and find it the best commercial variety that we have ever grown. On account of the uniformly double nature of the flowers it produces but little seed, consequently this is the first time that we are enabled to offer it to the trade. Shell-pink, rose (a grand flower) and purple, $3.50 per 1000. Olmstead's Commercial White, the best early all-purpose florists' aster in cultivation, $3.00 per 1000.

Simple's, as good as you can get anywhere—white, shell-pink and purple, separate, $2.50 per 1000. A. & G. Rosbach, Pemberton, N. J.

Gustav Pitzonka, Bristol, Pa.

Asters, transplanted. Vick's and Semple's Branching, in 4 separate colors—Hohenzollern White, Vick's Rose, White Branching Comet, Rosy Carmine, 75c per 100; $6.00 per 1000.

BULBS.

Daffodils, Emperor, Princeps, Spur, Ornatus, etc., that bloom earlier than imported bulbs. Why? Because Virginia-grown mature a month earlier. Six years have been spent in testing the climate, soil and varieties, by experienced European growers. We now offer only those kinds that grow to perfection in Virginia.

Double Von Sion flowers, but as blooms, contain green, we do not recommend them. Princeps maximus, blooming size generally sold, are not reliable bloomers, and we recommend only replanted, special grown stock.

Our strong, solid bulbs produce big blooms, and some give two flowers.

The Electric Circulator

Waverley, Mass., April 24, 1907.

MR. W. W. CASTLE, Boston, Mass.

Dear Sir:—It is a pleasure to recommend your Circulator for the very efficient work it does for me. I have two greenhouses, each 200 feet long, piped for steam with 1½-inch pipes, and can operate them perfectly with hot water by using the Circulator: in a very short time it brings the returns nearly as hot as the flows. As I have two of the Circulators in use under different conditions, I am well able to judge of the work they are capable of doing, and would not like to part with either of them.

Yours truly,
(Signed) WILLIAM W. EDGAR.

Greenhouse Heating.

BOILER AND PIPING.

I intend to build a greenhouse 25x80 feet and wish to maintain a temperature of 55 degrees to 60 degrees. One gable and also one side will contain glass. The walls will be four feet high and it will be ten feet to the ridge. Kindly inform me what capacity of boiler, also how many flows and how many 2-inch returns will be needed. I intend to use hot water. J. F.

The house in question will require a boiler rated to carry 1,000 feet of radiation. The piping should consist of a 3-inch flow under the ridge and fourteen 2-inch return pipes arranged on the side walls or under the benches, according to the character of the crop grown. The expansion tank should be attached to the main return near the boiler and should be elevated six to fifteen feet above the highest point in the system. L. C. C.

IN DAKOTA.

I have a house 16x60, with two paths and three benches. The side benches are three feet wide, and the one in the center is six feet. The house is three-quarter-span to the south. I want to heat it to 55 degrees or 60 degrees at night in South Dakota climate. I intend to build a house 14x60 and join to the south wall of the old house. This house will have two solid beds and two walks. I want 45 degrees to 50 degrees in this house at night. What is the best way to arrange the pipes in these houses and what size of pipe is best to use for hot water? I have a Wilks heater. How many feet of each size of pipe will each house require? G. T.

The house to be heated to 60 degrees should be provided with a 2½-inch flow pipe under the ridge and eleven 2-inch returns arranged in coils under the benches, so as to place an extra pipe under the bench on the most exposed side of the house.

The smaller house, to be run at 50 degrees, should be provided with a 2-inch flow pipe from the boiler to the far end of the house, where it should divide to supply two manifolds, one consisting of four pipes on the protected wall and one of five pipes on the ex-

William Mathews, the veteran orchid grower of Utica, notes with evident satisfaction the increasing popularity of his favorite flower, upon which he has spent years of toil and received pleasure and profit therefrom. While he has distributed many rare seedlings, he never attached his name to any.

Spencer & Martin, of Utica, report big sales. They received a carload of flowering plants from the Lake View Rose Gardens in perfect order and cleaned out at a good profit. The packing could not be beaten.

In my notes of last week I omitted to mention that Thomas Russell, of Jamestown, N. Y., intends putting in the Wittbold watering system. He believes it to be the ideal thing for field watering.

John Hatcher, of Amsterdam, N. Y., reports a big demand for Memorial day. His stock was very large and brought good prices. A. J. Hilton says this has been a banner season with him, although late.

The Market.

After the continued spell of miserable weather, Decoration day opened one of the best days of the month. The only complaint was the scarcity of stock. Everything sold at sight. Carnations were scarce and all outdoor flowers were as high as indoor stock. Lilacs from the south brought about the same price as roses and carnations. Peonies were good, all southern grown. Cape jasmine stood the long journey from Texas to Chicago, thence to Buffalo, and sold well. Thousands visited all cemeteries and it surely must have been the banner year. Usually prices have to be lowered at this time, but the scarcity of outdoor stuff sent all prices up.

Another serious situation is the fern question. Storage ferns are almost gone; what are left are useless. The southern ferns are good when you can get them, but heavy rains prevent their picking, and so the shortage is marked. However, we look for the fresh northern stock any day, as soon as the weather brightens up.

June weddings are coming thick and fast. Everybody is busy making bunches. The largest wedding in many years took place a few days ago, the work being done by W. J. Palmer & Son. Trinity church was decorated as it has never been before.

Various Notes.

A few days ago an agent from Schloss Bros., ribbon dealers in New York, called on the Buffalo florists. The young man entered a barber shop (lack of space prevents our printing his name) and proceeded to be shaved. The barber, after noting the points of the day, proceeded to tell him wherein he was deficient in skin beauty. The young man reached to feel of his cuticle and struck the razor, cutting a deep gash in his hand. A doctor was called in and five stitches put in his hand. Moral: "Don't interfere with the barber."

C. B. Knickman is in town again.

A notable feature in spring work this year is Boston ferns for all outdoor use. Bostons and Scottii are going fast and the usual shortage is not far off. The ferns make a very satisfactory filling for boxes, vases and pots. R. A. S.

MILWAUKEE.

The Market.

Trade for Decoration day was away beyond expectations. The volume done was in excess of last year, principally due to the shortage of stock and the high price on carnations and roses, as there was not the quantity in the market we had in previous years. There was considerable difficulty in taking care of late orders, as the supply depended entirely on greenhouse grown stock; there was practically no outdoor stock in to relieve the market. Last year there was an abundance of snowballs, lilac, tulips and valley to help out, but this year none of this stock was in on time.

The call for carnations was something enormous and thousands more could have been sold had they been obtainable. Peonies, lily of the valley, and tulips are coming in now, which should have been in for Memorial day, and would have brought good returns. The continued cold weather keeps stock coming in light and demand is still above supply; therefore, prices remain firm.

Various Notes.

Herman Staeps, Elm Grove, Wis., lost his residence by fire June 1. This was a large residence and originally built by one of the Cudahy brothers for a summer home. Mr. Staeps acquired the property, in addition to the greenhouses, which were on the grounds at the time, which he enlarged considerably. The loss is quite a serious one to Mr. Staeps, although he carried insurance.

Bedding stock has been moving rapidly the last week or so. Geraniums have been selling at an average of about $1 per hundred higher than previous years, and some growers were even demanding $10 per hundred for 4-inch stock and found ready sale for the same. Many other varieties of bedding plants were also higher than in past seasons.

C. C. Pollworth Co. took in a carload of palms from Belgium right during the Decoration day rush.

Holton & Hunkel Co. says all records were broken by cut flower sales for Decoration day.

Elastic

For Bedding Glass in Sash or for Filling Cracks or Seams in Roof Joints or Frames of Greenhouses or Hotbeds.

It is used in Machine or Bulb. If too thick for bulb, thin with a little Pure Linseed Oil, boiled. So thinned, it can be brushed into any crack or leak, making a solid filling. It makes a solid bed, impervious to moisture, and holds glass in its place, and will stop any crevice or fault. When once set on dry wood it does not heave. As regards the goods, the article is no new invention, but simply an article of the very best class, to do thoroughly good work, like old-time gentlemen expected when sashes were made with lead, and small panes of glass used that caught the water and leaked unless set with an elastic putty which once set by a mechanic was expected to remain, and did remain in good shape. This Twemlow's Old English Glazing Putty does; nothing more, nothing less. SOLD BY THE FLORISTS' SUPPLY HOUSES.

SEASONABLE

Eucharis Amazonica.

This beautiful warmhouse bulbous plant is deserving of more extended culture on both private and commercial places. Not only is it of easy culture, but the flowers are of great value, whether the whole spike is cut or the individual blooms are used for design work. To grow them successfully a house where a minimum temperature of 65 degrees is maintained would be ideal, but we have splendid specimens grown in a rose house. A little bottom heat is a decided advantage also in drying off the plants. Two crops of flowers can easily be had in a year and, with a little experience of their needs, three may be secured. In drying off the eucharis plants they should be allowed to become so dry as to cause loss of foliage. We usually keep them in a state of rest for about six weeks between the crops. This gives the plants eighteen weeks of rest and thirty-four for growing during the year.

Either pot or bench culture will produce excellent results with eucharis. In the benches the spikes are much more robust, but we think they do not flower so freely as in pots. A coarse compost of fibrous loam, from which the finer particles have been screened; old lumpy cow manure, charcoal, bone meal and coarse sand is suitable. Pots from ten to fourteen inches in diameter are best. While resting, the plants may be stood in a cooler and airier house. Frequent repotting is undesirable, the plants blooming best when the pots are matted with roots. Copious waterings and the free use of liquid food is necessary during the periods of growth.

The present is a good time to do any repotting. Give the plants some shade from the hot sun, a heavy coating, however, not being needed. A small portion of bench at the warm end of a house with steam or hot water pipes under it will produce a surprising quantity of flower in a year. For design work the flowers are unrivaled and a little experience will render it comparatively easy to time a crop when it will be most valuable. Mealy bug is partial to eucharis, but can be easily kept in control by the use of a spraying nozzle on the hose. The eucharis mite is troublesome in Europe, but we have had no experience with it here.

Euphorbia Fulgens.

This brilliant winter-blooming plant is not often seen nowadays. For Christmas decorations it should be far more cultivated. The culture does not vary a great deal from that of Poinsettia (euphorbia) pulcherrima. The plants after blooming are rested and cuttings should now be plentiful if the plants were started with the poinsettias. The young shoots root freely in a good bottom heat, or the mature wood may be utilized earlier in the season with good results. The old stock, if planted in a bench in a rose house temperature, will produce splendid branches of the brilliant, orange-scarlet flowers. These are especially valuable at Christmas.

For pot culture it is best to plant six or eight rooted cuttings in 6-inch or 7-inch pots. These will make effective decorative plants. The best success will be attained by growing the plants in a moderately warm house during the summer. While in flower, a lower temperature will prolong their flowering season.

shrubby-habited A. Williamsi, however, we have a splendid florists' plant, one well adapted for pot culture and, where summer flowering varieties are in demand, it should be of special value. While it needs a warm house to grow it to the best advantage, an ordinary greenhouse in our usually hot summers will be found all right for them. Propagation by soft-wood cuttings, preferably those rubbed off with a heel, is easy if a good bottom heat is at command. Potted along as required, quite nice little blooming plants may be had in one season. During winter allamandas should be kept drier at the root and a little cooler. Usually the foliage will all fall off. Pruned back, repotted and placed in a warm, moist house, they soon break away. A little pinching is needed to keep them bushy. The flowering season is from July to October, and it would be difficult to find any more Eucharis Amazonica in Design Work.

The treatment does not differ much from that of the poinsettia. Careful watering is at all times necessary. An oversupply will speedily ruin them. The old name for this plant was E. Jacquinæflora and this is still used by many growers.

Allamanda Williamsi.

The climbing allamandas, such as Hendersoni, nobilis and Schottii, are magnificent for training up the rafters of tropical houses when planted out or grown in large tubs. Their commercial value is not, however, great. In the beautiful pot plant than A. Williamsi. The flowers, which are smaller than those produced on the climbing varieties, are of better substance and possess a pleasing fragrance. A compost of turfy loam, dry cow manure, powdered charcoal and sand grows them well. Surface dressings of chemical fertilizers can be given after flowering commences.

Bougainvillea Sanderiana.

Begonia sanderiana is usually seen in considerable numbers at Easter in the larger cities and makes an excellent decorative plant. If desirous of increasing your stock it is not too late to propagate during the present month. Half-ripened wood cut in 6-inch lengths and given a little bottom heat will root in three weeks. Even quite hard wood will root, but takes longer. Pot off as soon as rooted and grow along in a light and sunny house. Give the plants all possible sunlight in order to ripen the shoots well by early fall. Drier conditions at the root are then necessary.

By having a number of plants and starting at different dates, a long suc-can be had for Christmas. Use flats containing four inches of compost. A mixture of loam, dried cow manure and a good dash of sand is about right. Give a good watering after planting and then keep on the dry side until the shoots have appeared. If kept constantly moist many of the bulbs will decay.

Cinerarias.

The present is a suitable time to sow a batch of this popular winter-blooming annual. Sown as late as August, good plants for spring flowering can be had, but if the plants are needed for Christ-

Brief Reminders.

Continue to put in poinsettia cuttings as soon as they are of serviceable length. Use great care in watering the young plants after potting. Shade from sun until nicely rooted in the pots, then give full sunlight.

Probably some of your earliest flowered marguerites have now started to grow a little. If you can secure any cuttings, put them in the propagating bed.

Keep amaryllis drier at the roots, but do not entirely withhold water yet to save time. Give them all possible sunshine.

The season has been a dragging one for bedding stock. All subtropical plants, such as musa, ricinus, lavatera, curculigo and caladium, should be got out at once. It is also time to put out croton, maranta, pandanus and similar fine foliage plants.

Fuchsias make useful summer blooming plants in pots. Shift along any in small pots. Keep them pinched and all flowers removed and they will be found useful in 5-inch or 6-inch pots in late summer.

Propagate scented-leaved geraniums now if you want nice plants to cut from next winter. There is always a good demand for cut shoots of this popular plant.

Make a final sowing of asters, stocks, mignonette, larkspurs and any other annuals needed for cutting outdoors. You can sow Shirley poppies for a month yet.

Look out for cutworms, which are now becoming destructive. Hand pick at night, or scatter poisoned bran in their haunts.

Take notice of desirable peonies. Every florist should grow some of these. There are seldom too many of the better shades, like pure white, soft and bright pink. Order now and plant early in September for best results.

Plant out young stock of hydrangeas and tie up the canes on your Rambler roses, on which you must depend for another season's flower.

Cypripedium insigne will grow best now in a cool, airy house, but should be shaded from the sun's rays. Water freely and spray overhead on bright days. Dahlias planted now will give better flowers than if set out a month earlier. Thin out the shoots on any which are growing.

Darwin Tulip Lord Duncan.

cession of flowers may be had. Keep the plants cool and well aired while in flower, to prolong their lasting qualities. After blooming, keep the plants dry for a few weeks, as with pelargoniums, then shake out, repot and syringe freely until shoots appear. Compost as recommended for allamandas will answer well for bougainvilleas. By starting the plants early some may be had for the Christmas trade.

B. glabra is a magnificent climber for the roof of a greenhouse. When planted out it grows most luxuriantly and produces shoots fifteen to twenty feet high. Its inflorescences are frequently used for summer decorations and, having great lasting properties, are valuable for this purpose.

Freesias.

We usually start our first batch of freesias early in July. If you saved your bulbs, the early batches should now, in the natural course of things, have ripened off their foliage and the bulbs may be shaken out at any opportunity. Do not throw away the little bulblets, which, if sown moderately thick in flats, will flower a little and produce good flowering bulbs for another season. You will find that bulbs of your own growing are superior to any you can buy of California or Bermuda origin, provided you do not cut your flowers too close to the bulb.

We consider the new variety, Purity, a grand acquisition and distinctly superior to either refracta alba or Leichtlinii. The flowers are pure white, and by starting the bulbs early in July they mas, or during January and February, it is best to get in the seed at once. Sow in a flat, thinly, first watering the soil with a watering pot with a fine rose. The seed must be covered very lightly. Cover with paper until the seeds germinate. At this season better success will be had by placing the seeds in either a north house or in a coldframe with a north aspect. The glass should be well shaded. If carefully watered, the seedlings should appear in about two weeks. When large enough to handle, prick off into flats of light, leaf-moldy compost and grow in a cool, airy frame.

Late Darwin Tulip Gretchen.

DUTCH BULBS

LATE-FLOWERING TULIPS.

A Neglected Class.

Florists, while they buy heavily of the ordinary early tulips, such as La Reine, Yellow Prince, Kaizerskroon, Cottage Maid, Chrysolora, and similar varieties for forcing or bedding purposes, strangely neglect the Darwins, Byblooms, Gesnerianas and other handsome late-flowering types. It is pleasing to note that on private estates there is a growing demand for the latter class, and it is to be hoped that commercial growers will take them in hand more than they have done in the past. Many of the best sorts are inexpensive. The bulbs do not deteriorate from year to year, as do the bedding varieties. In fact, I know of clumps of Darwins ten years old which continue to bloom finely, and one other good point about them is that the stems are long and stiff, averaging from eighteen to thirty inches, making them invaluable for cut flower purposes.

Their special value commercially lies in the fact that they can be had for Memorial day in ordinary seasons. The year 1907 is an abnormal one and some of our Darwins were hardly open May 30, but even in ordinary seasons we find that if the flowers are a little in advance of the time when they are needed, they can be cut before fully expanded and kept for a week in a cold cellar. Flowers this season were scarce for Memorial day and any florist who planted these late tulips reaped a good harvest. Certainly a bunch of twenty-five Gesneriana, or any of the scarlet, rose or pink Darwins, with two feet of stem, would be chosen by most of our customers in preference to the same number of carnations, or most of the roses now procurable.

Darwin Tulips.

The Darwin tulips constitute one of the most magnificent classes in the whole line of hardy bulbous plants. Their stems are long and stiff, breaking little in even heavy storms of wind and rain. We have seen these two and one-half feet in height, and they can be had two feet high in any good garden soil. If some of these average higher in price than the common bedding tulips, they more than counterbalance this by the higher price the flowers will bring and the fact that the bulbs last for more than one season.

A few good varieties of Darwins are: Lord Duncan, bright scarlet; Edmond Rostand, rosy scarlet; Gretchen, soft rose; Glory, brilliant scarlet; White Queen and La Candeur, both nearly pure white, and Fire King, carmine scarlet.

Cottage Tulips.

Many of what are commonly called in Europe the late-flowering cottage tulips are of great value commercially, although they are rarely seen in the markets, nor are they to be met with except casually even in our parks and public gardens. Like the Darwins, nearly all of these have long stems and they embrace many exquisite shades, some of which are unknown among the earlier and dwarfer bedding tulips.

A few varieties worthy of the attention of florists are: Bouton d'Or, also called Ida and Golden Beauty, clear golden yellow; retroflexa, light yellow with graceful reflexed petals; Isabella, also known as Shandon Bells and Blushing Bride, cream, turning carmine rose; elegans, brilliant scarlet; Golden Crown, yellow turning to crimson; Golden Eagle, golden yellow; Picotee, also called Maid-

They are inexpensive and may be had either mixed or in separate shades. Those with white grounds are marked with pink, rose, red or scarlet, while others are striped or marked with purple, blackish maroon or lilac.

In addition to their great value for cutting, all the late tulips are good for mass effects in shrubberies or herbaceous borders. They look best in circular or oval clumps of from fifty to 250 bulbs each, when they are very telling. The Darwins and late cottage tulips are all excellent for bedding and a separate bed of Vitellina, Gesneriana, Picotee and such Darwins as Gretchen, Lord Duncan and en's Blush, white margined with rose and turning pale crimson, a beautiful variety; and Gesneriana spatulata (major), brilliant scarlet with a bluish eye, probably the finest of the whole cottage tulip class for Memorial day trade, height two feet, stems stiff, a superb variety for bedding or planting in clumps along shrubberies. Vitellina, color sulphur yellow, is a beautiful variety, a little higher priced than others named.

Other Late Tulips.

The Bizarre class has flowers with yellow ground striped or feathered with white, purple or dark crimson. They are purchasable in separate colors at quite low rates. The bulbs of these have great lasting qualities. I have in mind clumps in a Massachusetts garden planted nearly fifteen years ago which are still blooming well.

The Byblooms, or Bybloomens, are another excellent late-flowering section. The color is less brilliant than in the case of the Darwins, but for mixed bouquets or large clumps they are quite effective.

Glory will outclass in effective display any of the early tulips.

It is very satisfactory to note that many American bulb merchants now carry in stock a good variety of these late tulips and I think there is a magnificent future before them on commercial establishments as well as on private estates. W. N. CRAIG.

RECOMMENDED HYACINTHS.

Segers Bros., Lisse, Holland, say that they especially recommend single hyacinths; they are preferable to double ones, as they produce larger spikes and force more easily. They recommend these sorts as follows:

Cavaignac, extra fine salmon pink, large full spike, keeps very long in forced state. This variety is found in every collection for exhibition, where it draws the attention.

Charles Dickens, beautiful pink, fine formed large spike. This is decidedly one of the finest pink hyacinths. It forces easily and always gives satisfac-

decorative plant. If desirous of increasing your stock it is not too late to propagate during the present month. Half ripened wood cut in 6-inch lengths and given a little bottom heat will root in three weeks. Even quite hard wood will root, but takes longer. Pot off as soon as rooted and grow along in a light and sunny house. Give the plants all possible sunlight in order to ripen the shoots well by early fall. LATE-FLOWERING TULIPS.

A Neglected Class.

Florists, while they buy heavily of the ordinary early tulips, such as La Reine, Yellow Prince, Kaizerskroon, Cottage Maid, Chrysolora, and similar varieties for forcing or bedding purposes, strangely neglect the Darwins, Byblooms, Gesnerianas and other handsome late-flowering types. It is pleasing to note that on private estates there is a growing demand for the latter class, and it is to be hoped that commercial growers will take them in hand more than they have done in the past. Many of the best sorts are inexpensive. The bulbs do not deteriorate from year to year, as do the bedding varieties. In fact, I know of clumps of Darwins ten years old which continue to bloom finely, and one other good point about them is that the stems are long and stiff, averaging from eighteen to thirty inches, making them invaluable for cut flower purposes.

Their special value commercially lies in the fact that they can be had for Memorial day in ordinary seasons. The year 1907 is an abnormal one and some of our Darwins were hardly open May 30, but even in ordinary seasons we find that if the flowers are a little in advance of the time when they are needed, they can be cut before fully expanded and kept for a week in a cold cellar. Flowers this season were scarce for Memorial day and any florist who planted these late tulips reaped a good harvest. Certainly a bunch of twenty-five Gesneriana, or any of the scarlet, rose or pink Darwins, with two feet of stem, would be chosen by most of our customers in preference to the same number of carnations, or most of the roses now procurable.

Darwin Tulips.

The Darwin tulips constitute one of the most magnificent classes in the whole line of hardy bulbous plants. Their stems are long and stiff, breaking little in even heavy storms of wind and rain. We have seen these two and one half feet in height, and they can be had two feet high in any good garden soil. If some of these average higher in price than the common bedding tulips, they more than counterbalance this by the higher price the flowers will bring and the fact that the bulbs last for more than one season.

A few good varieties of Darwins are: Lord Duncan, bright scarlet; Edmond Rostand, rosy scarlet; Gretchen, soft rose; Glory, brilliant scarlet; White Queen and La Candeur, both nearly pure white, and Fire King, carmine scarlet.

Cottage Tulips.

Many of what are commonly called in Europe the late-flowering cottage tulips are of great value commercially, although they are rarely seen in the markets, nor are they to be met with except casually even in our parks and public gardens. Like the Darwins, nearly all of these have long stems and they embrace many exquisite shades, some of which are unknown among the earlier and dwarfer bedding tulips.

A few varieties worthy of the attention of florists are: Bouton d'Or, also called Ida and Golden Beauty, clear golden yellow; retroflexa, light yellow with graceful reflexed petals; Isabella, also known as Shandon Bells and Blushing Bride, cream, turning carmine rose; elegans, brilliant scarlet; Golden Crown, yellow turning to crimson; Golden Eagle, golden yellow; Picotee, also called Maid-

They are inexpensive and may be had either mixed or in separate shades. Those with white grounds are marked with pink, rose, red or scarlet, while others are striped or marked with purple, blackish maroon or lilac.

In addition to their great value for cutting, all the late tulips are good for mass effects in shrubberies or herbaceous borders. They look best in circular or oval clumps of from fifty to 250 bulbs each, when they are very telling. The Darwins and late cottage tulips are all excellent for bedding and a separate bed of Vitellina, Gesneriana, Picotee and such Darwins as Gretchen, Lord Duncan and en's Blush, white margined with rose and turning pale crimson, a beautiful variety; and Gesneriana spatulata (major), brilliant scarlet with a bluish eye, probably the finest of the whole cottage tulip class for Memorial day trade, height two feet, stems stiff, a superb variety for bedding or planting in clumps along shrubberies. Vitellina, color sulphur yellow, is a beautiful variety, a little higher priced than others named.

Other Late Tulips.

The Bizarre class has flowers with yellow ground striped or feathered with white, purple or dark crimson. They are purchasable in separate colors at quite low rates. The bulbs of these have great lasting qualities. I have in mind clumps in a Massachusetts garden planted nearly fifteen years ago which are still blooming well.

The Byblooms, or Bybloomens, are another excellent late-flowering section. The color is less brilliant than in the case of the Darwins, but for mixed bouquets or large clumps they are quite effective.

Glory will outclass in effective display any of the early tulips.

It is very satisfactory to note that many American bulb merchants now carry in stock a good variety of these late tulips and I think there is a magnificent future before them on commercial establishments as well as on private estates.

RECOMMENDED HYACINTHS.

Segers Bros., Lisse, Holland, say that they especially recommend single hyacinths; they are preferable to double ones, as they produce larger spikes and force more easily. They recommend these sorts as follows:

Cavaignac, extra fine salmon pink, large full spike, keeps very long in forced state. This variety is found in every collection for exhibition, where it draws the attention.

Charles Dickens, beautiful pink, fine formed large spike. This is decidedly one of the finest pink hyacinths. It forces easily and always gives satisfaction. Those who know its value use it largely.

General Pelissier, brilliant carmine, compact spike, very early and easy forcer. This is one of the best and finest scarlet hyacinths for forcing.

Gertrude, rosy pink, compact spike and large bulb. A first-class forcing variety, profitable for market work. Being of erect habit, it is also excellent for bedding.

Gigantea, fine blush pink, large compact spike. The name indicates its character, as it has a giant spike. Is an excellent forcer, and well known among florists as a profitable variety for forcing for market.

King of Belgium (Roi des Belges) is one of the finest scarlet hyacinths; keeps as the well-known white and pink Baron Van Thuill.

Charles Dickens, dark porcelain blue, very large compact spike, fine trade variety, sure to give satisfaction.

Enchantress, clear light blue, one of the finest light blues, extra fine spike. An exhibition variety. Highly recommended for forcing.

Grand Lilas, extra fine porcelain blue, grand large spike and bells. Forces very easily. Is one of the finest light blue hyacinths.

Grand Maitre, deep porcelain blue, broad large spike and very large bulb, a grand variety.

King of the Blues, deep glossy blue, large compact spike, the finest dark blue hyacinth in cultivation.

TROUBLE WITH SALVIAS.

What makes seedling salvias shed their leaves and ten per cent die, also petunias and rose geraniums? I have no trouble in growing any other geraniums. The drainage is good and the soil is the same as other plants. My soil is a sandy loam. Would like to remedy the trouble.

C. P. M.

Either the plants have suffered from dryness at the root or the soil in which they were potted contained something which affected them. In the case of the salvias, a chill may have caused loss of foliage. These plants have to be grown fairly warm and should be carefully hardened off before being planted out. We have never any trouble with the scented geraniums and petunias. Each prefers a light and moderately rich compost, in which, if carefully watered, they should grow well. Possibly the soil in which they are potted may be poor, in which case the use of weak doses of liquid manure water or occasional waterings with nitrate of soda will help to tone up the plants.

C. W.

MIXED CROPS.

I have an even-span house, 18x100, built for forcing bulbs, the benches about two feet from the eaves. It is now in tomatoes, to be followed with chrysanthemums and some carnations. The soil was new last October, when the house was built, and I presume it will be right for either crop if dug deeply. We manured for tomatoes, not heavily, and use soot water. I shall put the carnations in the side benches to get the sun.

What I want to know is, presuming the temperature may be right for mums its color longer than any other scarlet hyacinth.

Lord Macaulay, deep carmine pink with white eye, the brightest of the dark reds. Extra large and compact spike, a splendid hyacinth. It is found in every collection for exhibition, a proof of its great value.

Moreno, extra fine pink, very large spike and bells, forces easily. Is a splendid hyacinth and found in every collection for exhibition. We highly recommend this variety for growing in large quantities for forcing.

Baroness Van Thuill, pure white, large compact spike, very fine for early forcing.

British Queen, pure white, grand spike and large bulb, not sufficiently known. A fine variety.

Grandeur a Merveille, fine blush white, very large spike. There is no better hyacinth of this color to grow in quantity.

La Grandesse, extra fine snow-white, large spike and fine formed bells, grand flower. This is an exhibition variety which has no equal among the single white hyacinths. Those who know its value use it largely, and every season the stock of it runs short in Holland.

Mme. Van der Hoop, pure white, extra large bells. Forces easily and is also very useful for outdoors, because of its erect habit. This is a fine variety, which we recommend to use in large quantities.

Baron Van Thuill, dark bright blue, large compact spike, has the same habit and carnations up to December 1, will it be high enough when we then fill up with Paper Whites, white Romans and Golden Spur?

Late Tulip Vitellina.

Have never grown carnations, only as a hobby, so know little about them. We expect to pinch back until September and then house them. We do not expect great things; merely to grow for local trade in the south. Can I put in the same house a few roses or Harrisii lilies, or both? We run about 55 degrees at night, but we get an up and down temperature, getting so much sun here in winter. We had to shade the house last January. We have some rich soil by us. Should we use this for the carnations on the side benches? We read all your cultural directions weekly. We have a touch of white aphids on tomatoes and black on mums. Will tobacco stems if syringed on settle them, and how strong? O. W. D.

A night temperature of 52 to 55 degrees is sufficiently high in winter for carnations. Such varieties as Enchantress and its sports, Queen and Harry Fenn, will be better at the cool end of the house, while Lawson and its sports, Mrs. Patten, Lady Bountiful, Victory, White Perfection and many other sorts will stand rather warmer treatment. The plants could do well on the side benches. I would certainly not recommend planting on soil in which other crops have been growing. Clean the benches out thoroughly, give a coat of whitewash inside and refill with new compost. Loam from the top spit of a pasture cut last fall would be ideal. If you have not added any fertilizer, mix about one-fourth well rotted horse or cow manure with it, also add a little bone meal. If you will chop down this compost, mix it well and leave in a pile until needed, it will then be in much better condition. Carnations are better planted before the middle of August. Five to six inches of compost is sufficient. Better not make the soil too rich at the start, as they can be fed by top dressings or liquid stimulants as needed.

It is difficult making the temperature just right for a variety of plants; 55 degrees is rather warm for chrysanthemums. Give them the cool end of the house and better run the house 50 degrees at night until they are out of the way. Then raise it gradually for carnations. A temperature of 55 degrees is all right for Paper Whites and Romans, each of which can easily be had early in December in such a house. Golden Spur would stand it a few degrees warmer, but if you don't need it very early we would say stick to 55 degrees rather than ruin other crops by too much heat.

Lilium Harrisii would prefer the warm end of the house, but if these were not needed until spring, any part of the house would answer. Easter comes quite late in 1908 and if they are for that occasion they will need holding back a good deal. Brides, Maids and Richmond roses do well in a night temperature of 56 degrees to 58 degrees in winter with all possible sunlight. If you plant any at all do not use any shading for these or carnations until later in the season than January, no matter if the sun does shine clear and hot; make any shading given very light.

The only sure cure for white fly is fumigation with hydrocyanic acid gas. Directions have frequently been given in the REVIEW how to use this gas. If you don't for any reason care to try it, syringe the plants with soap and water once a week. Use common hard soap. A writer in the REVIEW issue of May 30 recommends Scalecide as a good remedy. You can clean out black fly by fumigation with tobacco stems or nicotine of various brands or can drop some tobacco dust on the tops of the shoots. The juice from soaked tobacco stems is less certain than a spraying with kerosene emulsion or a weak solution of one of the liquid nicotine extracts. You can use juice from stems quite strong without injury to the foliage if you prefer to try it. C. W.

TREATMENT FOR STOCKS.

Will you kindly inform us as to the right time to sow stocks to follow chrysanthemums and give a few hints as to the care of same until planting? I would like to have a good double white, daybreak pink, purple and a good red.

S. B. F.

Presuming that your benches will be clear of chrysanthemums after Thanksgiving, the stocks seed should be sown about the middle of September, in flats of light, sandy soil, kept shaded until the seeds germinate and given a position well up to the glass to keep them sturdy. When large enough to handle, pot off singly into 2½-inch pots, using a compost of loam, leaf-mold and spent hotbed manure. Grow them on a light bench in a cool and airy house. Keep carefully watered and transplant to the benches before they become too much potbound. The soil on which chrysanthemums have been growing will also answer for the stocks if given a coating of old cow manure and a dressing of fine bone which has been well mixed.

Good varieties to grow are: Beauty of Nice, delicate flesh pink; White Column, pure white, and several shades of giant ten weeks', which include snow white, dark purple, lavender, blue, scarlet pink and several other colors, all of which may be purchased separately from any reliable seed house. Buy the best quality of seed procurable. It will cost more, but will pay in the end. Cheap seed will produce a majority of singles, which are of little value for any purpose. C. W.

NOVELTIES

WEDDING BELLS.

There was a time when the best wedding decorations, in which a wedding bell was used, were made by the use of a wire frame and flowers. This year, however, the leading decorators in Chicago and in a number of other cities have created their best effects by the use of a bell without flowers in its construction.

The bell is the development of the invention made by one of the employees of E. H. Hunt, Chicago. At first the bell was only used in red for Christmas, and had a wide sale, but a decorator asked to have one made in white for a wedding and since then numbers have been manufactured. The accompanying illustration shows the general style of the bell. It is made in sizes from fifteen to thirty-six inches in diameter and is made either with or without electric lights. In case a lighted bell is wanted, one lamp may be used in the center, or eight small lamps with frosted globes may be used around the edge of the bell, and the bell also is made with all nine lamps. Lighted and hung in the midst of a good floral decoration, the effect is all that could be desired; airy and graceful.

RAMALEY'S SPRAY HOLDER.

J. D. Ramaley, of Ramaley's Floral Exchange, St. Paul, says that the trade is taking much interest in his funeral spray cushion and holder, of which the REVIEW has spoken in previous issues. It is a wire loop, laced loosely with fine wire, for all the world like an egg-beater, and not only saves half the ferns (and ferns have been worth half a cent apiece for the last month), but it keeps the flowers in place without wiring. The device is Mr. Ramaley's own invention, but is not patented, and is so simple any florist can make a week's supply in a few minutes.

RETAILERS' ADVERTISING.

For a number of months A. Lange, 40 Madison street, Chicago, has been advertising steadily in the Tribune, and has as steadily increased the space and the expenditure. The Tribune Co. has this week attracted wide attention to Mr. Lange's advertising by sending to thousands of small local merchants throughout Chicago a copy of its statement showing Mr. Lange's advertising bills, together with a circular letter arguing that the same sort of advertising would pay numberless other merchants.

The statement shows that Mr. Lange began with the expenditure of $109.41 in November, and increased to $211.98 in March and $283.40 in April. In five months he has spent with the Tribune $924.61. "The Tribune assumes that Mr. Lange makes money out of this advertising, or he would not continue and increase it." Mr. Lange himself says that he is a firm believer in advertising, but declined to state to the REVIEW just what effect upon his business the advertising in the Tribune has had. He says, however, that the best advertisement he has had was the Tribune's distribution of its own advertising matter citing him as an example. Mr. Lange says that he had two purposes in undertaking this advertising. In the first place, he had changed his location and he thought it necessary to tell the people where he is now located, and in the second place, it was necessary to do something to get business at once, as the move to the new location resulted in a considerable loss instead of the hoped-

C. C. Campbell, who has charge of the Tribune's city advertising. "We think highly of his business." Incidentally, it may be interesting to know that the Tribune's advertising rate is 45 cents per agate line per insertion. There are fourteen agate lines to the inch, so each inch single column costs $6.30 a day.

A JERSEY JOB.

The illustration opposite is from a photograph made May 18 in the Baptist church at Summit, N. J. The decoration was put up by Andrew Wilson and was in lavender, white and green. The picture does little more than to give an idea of the lavish use made of palms and cut flowers. The branches of dogwood and apple were used in quantity and there were large numbers of sweet peas employed. Two pretty features of the decorations were the floral gate at the aisle in the church and the canopy of dogwood blossoms under which the bride and groom knelt while the ceremony was for gain. The Lange advertisements always are good, for they contain a definite offer of a seasonable article, and quote a price. They must pull business and no doubt the Tribune's assumption that they pay is warranted, although the strongest statement Mr. Lange will make to other florists is that "If it didn't cost so much, I would use other papers, too."

"Mr. Lange is quite an exceptional advertiser for a small merchant," said being performed. The bridal party carried orchids. The home of the bride's parents also was decorated in the same style, with palms, smilax, orchids and sweet peas, and it is reported that Mr. Wilson received $1,000 for the decoration.

CARPET BEDDING.

Please state what kind of blooming plants would be best for making a fine long bedding design in letters. The letters will be about twelve in number and will extend along a strip about four feet wide. Now, what would be the best plan for making the letters so plain as to be easily read from a distance of 300 feet? Should not the bed be on a slope? I intend to use Little Gem alyssum for planting the letters and dwarf blue ageratum for outside of the letters. How is Stella Gurney ageratum, if cut back hard, for this work? How would yellow alternanthera do for the outer work? I think something quite dark should be used for this and that the letters should consist of something in light colors. How far apart would you plant them? How would Echeveria secunda glauca mixed with Echeveria metallica do for a framework on the outside of the whole job, to finish off?

Santolina might do for the letters, but it does not show so well as the Little Gem alyssum, and I think that the Little Gem would keep in good shape all summer.

I intend to support my letters on the beds with some strong wire and have this tied to an iron stake driven into the ground. The letters will be about eight or ten inches wide on line; they will measure about three feet and a half or four feet from top to bottom and a little more than that from right to left.

Please mention, also, if it is not wise to plant other plants on top of this bed, for blooming, etc. Would this make it look bad? How would Begonia Vernon do for this? I think that the bed ought to be planted altogether with low-growing plants, as I am going to make a large canna bed thirty feet behind this first bed, and between these two there will be a bed of blooming petunias and another of geraniums, etc., with salvias and other plants on both sides, and I wish to make a clean job of the whole design. A. T.

I do not think that any of the flowering plants, such as alyssum and ageratum, are so suitable for such carpet bedding as you refer to as are some of the various colored-leaved plants. I see no necessity for the lettering being of flowering plants. Such colored-leaved subjects as Pyrethrum Golden Feather, santolina or golden alternanthera would answer fully as well. If they could be depended upon to flower persistently, Lobelia pumila White Gem and L. pumila magnifica, dark blue, are unsurpassed. The white sport of Begonia Vernon would be preferable to white alyssum. If absolute formality in lettering is needed, why not use Echeveria secunda glauca? I would raise the soil a little where the letters are, to bring them up to the necessary height. Wires are considered unnecessary. The ageratum will grow rather too strong, in spite of pinching. Echeveria metallica will do very well for the outer framework. Vernon or Erfordii begonias stand the sun perfectly and can be depended upon to flower all summer. Personally, I see little to admire in these mosaic constructions, but if you want a lettered bed it would not do to relieve the flatness by dotting taller plants through it. This would spoil the effect of the lettering altogether. I think, however, that if you planted a bed on this principle it would be in much better taste than the one you are now planning to create. Carpet beds should be by themselves on a lawn, and no other bedding should be sufficiently near to spoil their effect. To make the lettering show up, it would be better to give the bed a slight slope. The whole bed should be of low plants. Do not attempt to run any lines of taller growing ones at the back; even coleus, if pinched, will be too tall. Centaurea candidissima is a nice, white-leaved plant, but it cannot be sheared into shape. C. W.

CALTHA PALUSTRIS.

Is Caltha palustris, or meadow daisy, a plant which grows in water? Can it be used as a bedding plant with coleus, iris, etc.? H. J. H.

This is a moisture-loving plant, being usually met with in a wild state near to running streams or in moist woods. While it is classed as a semi-aquatic on account of its partiality for wet ground, it succeeds well in garden borders which are deeply spaded and liberally manured and makes an effective spring flower. Its common name is marsh marigold. In New England it is frequently called the American cowslip.

We cannot recommend this plant for bedding purposes except for mass effects in an early spring border. With coleus and other colored-leaved, heat-loving subjects it would be entirely out of place and of no value whatever. C. W.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS

SOIL FOR MUMS.

As this is the first year that I will have anything to do with the running of greenhouses, I should like to ask a few questions as to the soil for my benches. Would it be advisable for me to plant mums in soil that roses were grown in last winter? The soil consists of sod that was piled and turned the year before. There is a little clay and cow manure in it. The soil does not seem sour, but is a little green on top, along the edges. We intend to plant them about June 15. If it is doubtful about the soil, I can haul in some sod that was plowed early this spring, but not piled. If that is good enough for mums, would the rose soil be all right for lettuce, with bone meal or sheep manure mixed in? I have not had any experience with mums. We have some fine, healthy plants to start with. They were struck in February, but with the aid of Smith's "Mum Manual" and common sense I think I can make a fair showing.

How long will it take the houses to be rid of red-spider, if practically everything is removed? There is no other way to kill them, is there, only with lots of water, spraying under the benches and all over? H. E. K.

Mums can be grown in the same soil that roses were grown in last winter if nothing else is available, but absolutely new soil is so far superior in greenhouse culture for any crop that I would advise removing the old soil and putting in new. I consider it time and money well spent. The sod that was plowed early in the spring, if it be broken up well, will give far better results, for mums love a fibrous loam. The rose soil could be used for lettuce this coming winter, if stacked up and enriched with rotten manure and bone meal. Where soil is scarce it is a great temptation to use it over and over again, but it is poor economy. Soil that has grown a crop of mums can be used in the winter for potting soft-wooded bedding plants, or things of that kind, that are soon moved again or planted out, but for growing crops in a bench, I say renew the soil if you want the very best results.

Red spider can be cleaned out, when a house is entirely empty, by burning sulphur in the house, first tightly closing the ventilators and doors so the fumes cannot escape. This will kill plant life as well as insect, so that everything must be removed from the house. The careful grower cleans his house entirely of soil, scrapes up all the soil and debris from under the benches and carts that out, then treats the house to a dose of sulphur fumes and white-washes the bottoms of the benches and the side walls with good hot lime. So treated, a house smells clean and is clean. Many florists do not realize the importance of cleanliness in plant growing, and under the benches the rubbish is allowed to accumulate until the benches are torn down to be replaced.

This affords an ideal breeding place for vermin of every description, and it is not long before the plants show it. Few of us have time to put on fancy frills, but by starting with a clean house it can be easily kept clean by brushing up the walks once a week. We are taught that so far as spider is concerned the water does not kill it, but that in spraying the force of the water dislodges it from its host plant and discourages it from future operations. Whether this is so or not, the man that can use a hose efficiently is seldom bothered with spider. CHARLES H. TOTTY.

QUANTITY OF FERTILIZER.

How much sheep manure, dried, should be used to, say, a wheelbarrow of soil, to plant chrysanthemums in? H. J. H.

Much depends on the strength of the sheep manure. So far as I have seen it, there is considerable variation in this fertilizer. Some that is finely ground appears to be half soil. Personally, I only use sheep manure in liquid form, but a 6-inch pot to a wheelbarrow of soil should be perfectly safe if the sheep manure is fresh and strong. If H. J. H. will try a small section of his bed in soil without the sheep manure, and use the manure later as a liquid, I have an idea he will get better results out of it. C. H. T.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

Cultivation.

The cool weather and frequent rains during May and so far this month have given plants in the field a grand chance to become well established. If thorough cultivation has been kept up, particularly soon after each rain, there would seem to be no good reason why stock should not be growing vigorously and the ground practically free from weeds. The day is past when cultivation was delayed until it could be delayed no longer, lest the weeds foreclose and take full possession. Up-to-date methods now demand stirring the trodden soil between the rows in the afternoon of the day planted, and from then until the plants are lifted there should be no crust allowed to form on the surface.

We have for some time grown our plants on the intensive plan, that is, close planting on comparatively small areas of land. Among our reasons for this are limited room and difficulty in securing manure in satisfactory quantity and quality. However, with unlimited land I can see no advantage, as far as the production of first quality plants is concerned, in spacing them three feet or more between rows and two feet apart in the row, as is sometimes done. Three feet between rows is none too much if cultivation be done with horses, but we use the Planet, Jr., or Iron Age, two-wheeled hand cultivators, which, by many who never used one, are considered toys or playthings, but that matters none, for these contrivances do the work well and reduce the labor of hand hoeing to a mere matter of form, besides compelling the operator to rivet his attention on the work in hand and keep his feet where they belong.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Cultivating and Topping.

Now that all your young carnation plants are in the field and it is yet too early to begin preparations for replanting, you will be able to give them proper attention for a few weeks, and in that time they should get under headway for a good season's growth. As I have often said before, you should keep the cultivator going just as much as possible to keep the soil loose on the surface. It not only helps to keep down the weeds, but it prevents baking of the soil during a dry spell. Try to go through them at least once each week in the absence of rain, and in case of rain get into them after every rain just as soon as the soil dries enough to crumble nicely. Be just as careful, however, to keep off the field while the soil is wet and packy as you are with the soil inside. You will find it necessary to go through them with the hoe to get out the weeds from close around the plants and to loosen the soil in the row between the plants. This latter is as important as the cultivating and should not be neglected. By keeping the field well cultivated you will avoid the necessity of artificial watering, which is not desirable except in rare cases. I will have more to say on this subject at some future time.

From now on you must look closely after the topping of the plants. With good weather the plants should make rapid progress, and it will pay you to keep them topped as closely as is practicable in order to lose as little growth as possible. Especially is this true if you intend to begin housing in July. We notice that plants that were topped a few weeks before they were planted in the field are now needing to be topped back the second time. By the time each shoot is topped and breaks again they will be nice, bushy plants and ready to plant in if desirable. You do not want a large plant to set in the bench during July.

There is an art in this topping which it will pay every carnation grower to study, as it will have a direct bearing on the steadiness of next season's cut of blooms, providing the plants are not benched too late in the fall. Go over the plants frequently and top back, not too many shoots on one plant at one time, but top the longer ones and leave the balance a few days. This will not only keep the shoots coming in a steady succession later on, but it will keep the plant growing more steadily without checking it so severely as cutting off every young shoot will do.

In topping you should also keep in mind the production of shapely plants. By judicious topping you can often get nice, shapely plants from varieties that are inclined to grow straggly. Such varieties should be kept as close to the ground as possible and topped every time a shoot makes two or three pairs of blades. In that way the plants will grow bushy until you bench them, and after that you can support them. Some growers try to get considerable stem between the ground and the lowest break, and while their reasons are good and it will work very well with some varieties, yet with other varieties, such as the "let me lay down" kinds, it does not work at all. Varieties that produce a rather open growth had better be topped rather low. Even if some of the eyes below the soil break, it will do no harm, but rather the contrary. The stem springing from such eyes will be the same as the main stem of the plant and will not rot like a green stem that is covered up after it is grown.

You cannot set any specific period of time to allow between each time you go over the plants. The rapidity of the growth will have to govern that. Of course, you ought to see the plants every day to keep posted on their condition and progress. That does not mean that you should top some of them every day, but you will be able to do it when it is needed, and as I have said before, you will not need to lose too much growth by having to cut away more than is necessary on account of having let them grow too long.

FERTILIZERS.

Will you kindly advise whether distillery manure is good for mixing with soil in the growing of roses and carnations?

Manure from horses and cattle fed on distillery and brewery products is absolutely worthless on the rose and carnation bench. Indeed, it is worse than worthless; it is a rank poison under such conditions.

The analysis of farm-yard manure from well fed cattle shows that it contains all the constituents, without exception, which are required by roses and carnations to bring them to perfection, and hence it may be called a perfect manure. Manures for roses and carnations should be rich in potassium, phosphorus and nitrogen, as these elements are indispensable to vegetable life. These elements are contained in barn-yard manure in nearly the proper proportions, with little of the caustic properties so prevalent in many of the chemical compounds, and in the gradual decomposition of the manure these elements are given off in quantities and in such form as to be easily assimilated by the plants.

Stable manure and all decomposing animal and vegetable substances have also a tendency to promote the decay of stubborn organic remains in the soil, on the principle that putrescent substances hasten the putrefaction in other organic bodies with which they come in contact.

From experiments made at different stations and also from the experience of many good growers, manure from brewery fed cattle has proved a failure, and all such products should be avoided for greenhouse purposes. RIBES.

Otto Schwill, Sr.

Otto Schwill, Sr., one of the best known citizens in Memphis, Tenn., and senior member of the firm of Otto Schwill & Co., wholesale seed merchants, died a few minutes after 10 o'clock Monday morning, June 10, following an apoplectic stroke which befell him Sunday afternoon immediately after he had returned home from the service at Trinity church. His death occurred at the family residence, 1713 Poplar avenue.

The end came as a surprise, the merchant on the morning prior to his death having said he felt well. The store was opened as usual Monday morning, but upon receipt of a telephone message after 10 o'clock those in charge suspended business for the day and crepe was hung upon the door.

Mr. Schwill was 61 years old. He is survived by Mrs. Schwill, Otto Schwill, Jr., and Carl Schwill, his sons, Mrs. J. H. Boyd, a daughter, and Mrs. G. Huebner, a sister.

He was a member of the American Seed Trade Association and of many Memphis organizations, being a director in the Commercial Trust and Savings Bank, a member of the Business Men's Club and Merchants' Exchange, a Mason in high standing in the South Memphis lodge, and also belonged to the German societies.

Mr. Schwill was born in Koenigsberg, Germany, coming to the United States when he was 15 years old, locating at Cincinnati, where he received his education. Here he was employed by a bank and eventually went into the seed business with a brother. In 1869 Mr. Schwill removed to Memphis and established the firm of Otto Schwill & Co. He was president of the Continental National Bank for three years, and until it went into voluntary liquidation. Mr. Schwill was known as a public spirited citizen.

Julius Kretschmar.

Julius Kretschmar, of Flatbush, Brooklyn, N. Y., died suddenly of paralysis June 8, and his funeral on Tuesday was largely attended. Mr. Kretschmar was a life member of the S. A. F. and a member of the New York Florists' Club for many years. He came to this country from Germany in 1864. His age was 62 years. He leaves a brother, who with him constituted the firm of Kretschmar Bros., long and favorably known in the east, with large greenhouse plants formerly at Flatbush and later at Nyack-on-the-Hudson. Mr. Kretschmar never married. He was a genial, whole-souled man, universally respected and had a host of friends.

William Krumm, Sr.

William Krumm, Sr., 76 years old, who had been a resident of St. Joseph, Mo., for forty-two years, died June 2 at his home, Twenty-eighth and Hickory streets. He was formerly a contractor, but in late years had been engaged in the business of florist. He was a Mason and Odd Fellow, and is survived by seven children—G. W. Krumm, of Kansas City; W. F. Krumm, of Wetmore, Kan.; John, Henry and F. W. Krumm, of St. Joseph; Mrs. Fred Larzelere and Mrs. Maggie Leucht, of St. Joseph.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

At last we have a foretaste of "the good old summer time." Sunday was worth waiting the six months of cold weather for. Now the market gardener can plant his tomatoes for the fourth time and once more plant his seed. The outdoor flowers, too, will have a chance and will come in floods before the week is over.

Of peonies there are myriads that will open before the week is closed. Some say $5 a hundred for the best of them will look high by Saturday. The Cottage Gardens are shipping thousands to the market. John Young has a big supply from his farm at Bedford. The south is not through its shipments. Every wholesaler has his cellars and ice-boxes ready for the flood.

Naturally the price of roses tends downward. Beauties are cut in two; $12 per hundred will sometimes buy the best of them. Brides and Maids will be going off in their boxes by Saturday at summer slip rates, which means a lower average than at any time thus far this year. Mildew does not help them, and there is a lot of it. But growers have no complaint this season that can be justified. Higher prices than ever before known in May is the record. The cold spring had its advantages.

Carnations seem to have suffered the greatest shock. Some grand Lawsons sold as low as $10 a thousand June 10. For the novelties $2 will be top before the week is over, $1 a hundred the average price, and thousands will seek the street outlet at 50 cents a hundred. At least, that is what the men say who handle 10,000 and over a day, and they ought to know.

Orchids were never finer and the supply is abundant. There has been a steady increase in the number of expert growers of this king of flowers in this section. Of lilies and valley there is a sufficiency and prices of these, too, have gone with the majority to lower levels. Sweet peas were never finer in quality.

Weddings and commencements and the European travel keep the retailers busy. June is maintaining its record in this respect and every store has had its share. Some of the events have demanded decorative work that has cost over four figures, several have been carte blanche, whatever that may signify, and a considerable number have brought the decorator $500. Some of the functions have called for unique, novel and original work, especially in table decorations. It is the man who can demonstrate his individuality nowadays who secures the larger contracts. More and more will intelligence, thoroughness and perfectness of detail make reputations that will ensure success.

Club Meeting.

The last meeting of the Florists' Club for the season was held in the Hotel Earlington Monday evening, June 10, President Totty in the chair. About fifty members were present and a most interesting and harmonious meeting closed the most prosperous winter season the club has ever known.

The committee appointed to discuss closer relations with the Society of American Florists reported having had a meeting Monday afternoon at the office of Traendly & Schenck. Suggestions from the club were requested. As to an alliance with the Horticultural Society of New York, it was suggested by Mr. O'Mara that the club enjoy a field day on Wednesday of this week, as a preliminary to the consideration of the matter, and it was voted that the club meet at the office of the secretary, John Young, and go in a body to the exhibition at Bronx park. Almost the entire attendance signified intention of being present.

The report of progress by the committees appointed on the securing of a permanent home for the club and on life membership was accepted. The outing committee exhibited its program, completed, and reported widespread and liberal interest in the club's seventh annual holiday July 2. The prize list exceeds all former contributions and the advertising patronage is far in advance of any other year.

Mr. Traendly withdrew his motion to have the club subscribe $250 to the guarantee fund for the national flower show, having heard from Mr. Kasting that subscriptions to date far exceeded all expectations.

The death of Julius Kretschmar, one of the club's members, was announced and resolutions of condolence ordered, the committee to draw up the same being John Scott, P. O'Mara and A. Jaennecke. Suitable resolutions were also ordered sent to E. V. Hallock because of the death of his father; the committee, Messrs. Wallace, O'Mara and Birnie.

A committee on arrangements for the transportation of the club's members to the S. A. F. convention at Philadelphia was appointed, consisting of Messrs. Traendly, Young and Nugent.

A long discussion took place as to the club's place of meeting when we convene again the second Monday in September. The decision was left to the trustees. Messrs. Nugent, Scott, O'Mara, Sheridan, Guttman, Marshall and Totty took part in the discussion, while Messrs. O'Mara, Manda, Jaennecke and others ventilated the canteen question. J. C. Vaughan spoke in behalf of the national flower show. Wm. P. Craig, of Philadelphia, spoke of the progress being made in behalf of the entertainment of visitors to the S. A. F. convention. John Birnie spoke of the enthusiastic invitation sent the club by Vice-President Westcott and President Totty waxed eloquent on special trains, big attendance and record breaking interest.

A beautiful seedling rose of the Wichuraiana family, bright pink and resembling Lady Gay, was exhibited by Julius Roehrs, Jr.; it has been named Julius Roehrs. W. P. Craig exhibited his new fern, Nephrolepis Amerpohlii, in varied sizes and received a certificate of merit.

Various Notes.

A. M. Henshaw has rented the big store at 44 West Twenty-eighth street, over Traendly & Schenck's, and will move to his new and larger quarters July 1. Mr. Henshaw is one of the younger generation of wholesalers, whose enterprise and progress have been marked. He is a nephew of Samuel Henshaw, the pioneer, who is now seriously ill at his home in Staten Island, and one of the partners in the firm of Henshaw Bros., at Chatham, N. J.

Joseph Millang, manager of the New York Cut Flower Co., is taking even more than the usual interest in the American Beauty nowadays, Mrs. Millang having just presented him with a handsome little daughter.

The early closing movement on the second floor of the Coogan building, which includes all the firms doing business there, was inaugurated June 1 and from now until September 1 the doors close at 3 p. m. There seems to be no good reason why this hour should not be generally adopted by the wholesalers and many of the leading firms have already announced their intention of doing so. The amount of business done by all the wholesale cut flower men in the afternoons during the hot months is not sufficient to require keeping open. The retailers can easily supply all their needs before noon.

Michael Ford, of Ford Bros., has been serving his country in jury duty lately, and this week A. J. Guttman has taken up the "white man's burden."

A new firm in the wire design and florists' supply business opened June 1, at 466 Sixth avenue near Twenty-eighth street. It consists of Messrs. Steffens and Hansgen, with the title of Steffens & Co. Mr. Steffens was for years with the big German house of Karl Brughans, of Hamburg, and Mr. Hansgen has been for sixteen years in the service of Reed & Keller. There seems to be an abundance of room and opportunity for competent new men in every branch of the trade, while the old and established houses go right on adding every year to the volume of their business.

The death of Julius Kretschmar, reported in this week's obituary column, is deeply regretted in this city, where Mr. Kretschmar was widely known and highly respected.

The exhibition of the Horticultural Society of New York takes place this week Wednesday and Thursday at Bronx park. A large delegation from the New York Florists' Club will attend.

June 25 to 27 the twenty-fifth annual convention of the American Seed Trade Association will be held in this city. Preparation has been made to give the seedsmen a royal reception.

Many nurserymen from this vicinity have gone to Detroit to attend the annual convention of the American Association of Nurserymen there. No season to compare with this in its advantage to nurserymen has ever been known in this country. Shipments are going on daily and the end is not yet, while the business here is only in its infancy and growing so rapidly that it is impossible to meet the greatly increased demand.

John Kral good-naturedly denies that he has been ill with water on the brain; he says that it was malaria, which isn't on the brain, and that the attack was light.

Sigmund Geller left for Europe June 12, to be away until August 7. He will visit Germany, France and his old home in Austria and return by way of Italy, with many novelties for the winter season.

Some twenty new violet houses are going up in the Rhinebeck section and all the old ones will be doing business next fall at the old stand. There is some talk of black-rot and damage to the plants, but no serious injury is feared.

John Birnie and Joseph Manda have been on the sick list.

Walter Mott and family left June 12 for Sharon, Pa., where Mr. Mott will form a partnership with Mr. O'Brien and take an interest in both the growing and retailing departments of the business.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

In making up the market report for the last week, I found the wholesalers again had an oversupply of roses and carnations. Outside of a few weddings, which were confined to the uptown florists, some early school commencements were about all that was going on. Funeral work was not so heavy as usual last week. The last week of the social season should be lively, with school work and weddings. Mrs. Ayers will furnish both the Central and the McKinley high schools with plant decorations; George Waldbart will supply the bouquets.

The Whilldin Bowling Trophy.

Both are large jobs. After this week, of course, we expect business to go into summer quietness as usual.

There was much difference in prices of cut stock comparing the week preceding Decoration day, when stock was scarce, with last week, when everything was plentiful and demand slow. Extra fancy stock is hard to obtain, in any quantity, but firsts and seconds in roses and carnations have been more than could be disposed of unless job-lot prices prevailed. Jacq roses are now coming in from outdoors; also sweet peas, field daisies and cornflowers. The growers will soon empty their houses of last season's stock and then we can look for a little scarcity for a while. Then some of us can take vacations and wonder what next season will bring forth.

Various Notes.

E. W. Guy, of Belleville, was here June 6 to visit his uncle, W. E. Guy. They will assist Mrs. Guy in settling the estate of the late T. W. Guy.

Robert Beyer, who seldom comes downtown, called last week and, with a few friends, tried his hand at bowling. I won't mention the score, as Robert is not as young as he used to be.

President H. C. Irish, of the St. Louis Florists' Club, was at Lansing, Mich., May 31.

Charles Wors has the cut flower privilege at the Delmar and West End Heights summer gardens. He says business is slow as yet, owing to the small attendance these cool nights.

It has been rumored that the wholesalers will get together and close their places during the months of July and August at 5 p. m. and at noon on Saturdays.

Chairman Smith, of the club's trustees, announces that the annual picnic will be held at Romona park, Thursday, July 25. The trustees met at Beyer's June 8.

The report in last week's issue that Arthur Ellison is again with the Ellison Floral Co. was a mistake. He helped them out on several large weddings they had during the week and in this way the report was current that he was again with the old folks.

C. A. Kuehn has been receiving a big lot of fine Spanish iris. There was a good sale for the lighter shades.

Young & Sons Co. reports that this was one of the best years in the seed and plant department, which is still keeping busy. The floral department will be busy this month, with wedding decorations and school work.

The Tesson tract, adjoining Forest park, on which the old Tesson greenhouses stood, was sold last week for $250,000. The deal was completed by Robert F. Tesson, who represented his mother. They retain ten acres.

George E. Kessler, landscape gardener, reports that the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Co. will in sixty days turn over to the city that portion of Forest park used for the exposition, fully restored for park use.

S. Kehrmann, who was secretary of the St. Louis Florists' Club in 1889, then connected with the Ellery Floral Co., was a caller last week. Mr. Kehrmann expects to attend the club's twentieth anniversary celebration June 29 and talk over old times with the members. Luther Armstrong, the first secretary of the club, also will be present. Among the other florists who were present at the first meeting of the club, June 28, 1887, and who will attend this celebration are James S. Wilson, Wm. Ellison, Chas. Juengel, E. W. Guy, R. Frow and Alexander Waldbart. The others who attended the first meeting were J. M. Jordan, Chas. Cannon, Henry Michel, Wm. Schray and Julius Koenig, who are now numbered among the dead. The above list were the charter members of the St. Louis Florists' Club, known at that time as the St. Louis Florists' Exchange. J. J. B.

WYOMISSING, PA.—George W. Becars has bought five lots in this town and will at once erect greenhouses.

of us can take vacations and wonder what next season will bring forth.

Various Notes.

E. W. Guy, of Belleville, was here June 6 to visit his uncle, W. E. Guy. They will assist Mrs. Guy in settling the estate of the late T. W. Guy.

Robert Beyer, who seldom comes downtown, called last week and, with a few friends, tried his hand at bowling. I won't mention the score, as Robert is not as young as he used to be.

President H. C. Irish, of the St. Louis Florists' Club, was at Lansing, Mich., May 31.

Charles Wors has the cut flower privilege at the Delmar and West End Heights summer gardens. He says business is slow as yet, owing to the small attendance these cool nights.

It has been rumored that the wholesalers will get together and close their places during the months of July and August at 5 p. m. and at noon on Saturdays.

Chairman Smith, of the club's trustees, announces that the annual picnic will be held at Romona park, Thursday, July 25. The trustees met at Beyer's June 8.

The report in last week's issue that Arthur Ellison is again with the Ellison Floral Co. was a mistake. He helped them out on several large weddings they had during the week and in this way the report was current that he was again with the old folks.

C. A. Kuehn has been receiving a big lot of fine Spanish iris. There was a good sale for the lighter shades.

Young & Sons Co. reports that this was one of the best years in the seed and plant department, which is still keeping busy. The floral department will be busy this month, with wedding decorations and school work.

The Tesson tract, adjoining Forest park, on which the old Tesson greenhouses stood, was sold last week for $250,000. The deal was completed by Robert F. Tesson, who represented his mother. They retain ten acres.

George E. Kessler, landscape gardener, reports that the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Co. will in sixty days turn over to the city that portion of Forest park used for the exposition, fully restored for park use.

S. Kehrman, who was secretary of the St. Louis Florists' Club in 1889, then connected with the Ellery Floral Co., was a caller last week. Mr. Kehrman expects to attend the club's twentieth anniversary celebration June 29 and talk over old times with the members. Luther Armstrong, the first secretary of the club, also will be present. Among the other florists who were present at the first meeting of the club, June 28, 1887, and who will attend this celebration are James S. Wilson, Wm. Ellison, Chas. Juengel, E. W. Guy, R. Frow and Alexander Waldbart. The others who attended the first meeting were J. M. Jordan, Chas. Cannon, Henry Michel, Wm. Schray and Julius Koenig, who are now numbered among the dead. The above list were the charter members of the St. Louis Florists' Club, known at that time as the St. Louis Florists' Exchange. J. J. B.

WYOMISSING, PA. George W. Beans has bought five lots in this town and will at once erect greenhouses.

BEFORE you order stock for import, consult the European advertising pages in the REVIEW.

THE spring plant trade was later than usual in starting, because of the unseasonable weather, but stocks in nearly all lines are now well cleaned up.

Results bring advertising.
The REVIEW brings results.

THE weather-man's hand seems to be a trifle unsteady even yet.

You can clean out all plant surpluses left from local spring sales by the use of a small advertisement in the REVIEW; but you must act in time.

SEND out good stock and you will build a permanent trade—one that will be a real asset; but send out stock that is not what it should be and you will have to find a new customer for each sale, and there is no profit in that.

N. GREIVELDING, Merrill, Wis., made a trial of Gladiolus America under glass and they were so fine that in his small town he could have sold more of them at 25 cents each. A specimen spike sent the REVIEW showed they were well worth the price.

THIS is the month that collections should have attention. July and August are vacation periods of slow business, is O. K. I would not be without it, nor do I see how any florist can. Your classified advs. are a boon to the buyer; at least one does not need to spend valuable time to hunt for his wants. Since you started it, I note some imitations which only prove the superiority of the REVIEW. That's right; keep it up. As long as you lead us right we will follow! Reverse your plan, and you will have to go afoot. When I have read the REVIEW I have read them all. I just mean it, and no apology about it.

THE WEEKLY FLORISTS' REVIEW

and if you do not get your money now you will have to wait till September or October for a good part of it. Nobody ever lost much that was worth having by being a good collector.

PEONY MEETING POSTPONED.

A. H. Fewkes, secretary of the American Peony Society, telegraphs from Newton Highlands, Mass., June 12, as follows:

"Peonies not open at Ithaca June 18; meeting therefore postponed to June 27 and 28."

Besides the usual exhibition of cut blooms, the society has an extensive collection of varieties, comprising 1,933 lots of one, two or three plants each, growing on the Ithaca Experiment Station grounds, which have been donated by peony men all over Europe and America. These are the blooms referred to as not being ready until ten days later than usual.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

It looks as though summer had come at last, and the wholesale market is more nearly approaching a summer basis than at any time this season. It has been months since the supply of stock was adequate in all departments. This week there can be no complaint of shortage.

There is considerable difference in the reports made by the various wholesalers. Some of them say demand is ahead of other seasons, while other houses find this week slow. It appears that crops have increased through the whole Chicago shipping territory. The result is that those houses, a majority of whose customers have some glass of their own, find that calls have slackened. The houses fortunate in having customers who have no glass of their own find demand excellent.

The wholesalers are as one man in reporting the carnation supply ahead of legitimate requirements. The spring crop is at its height. Some of the stock is of excellent quality and all of it is long in stem, but the warm, moist weather has resulted in a large proportion of soft flowers, and there are a good many complaints of shipments arriving in a sleepy condition. Prices have gone down to the lowest point this season. The best stock still commands better figures than usual in June, but the surplus must be jobbed off at rates which bring the averages far down.

The houses are differently situated on roses. Many growers are throwing out or drying off and the result is that some wholesalers find themselves with comparatively few roses, while others, whose growers are keeping their places going, have the heaviest cuts of the season. Those who cater to the heavy spring and good summer demand for first-class roses are now cutting some splendid stock, for which prices hold fairly steady. The low grades are sold cheaply, for the call for short roses for funeral work has abated. There are large supplies of fancy Beauties, both from young stock and from old. Richmond and Chatenay are superb and some splendid Killarney are seen.

The first of the local peonies arrived this week, and are good. In a few days the crop will be on in full blast. E. E. Pieser says all the local growers he has seen insist that the flowers will be better than usual this year. We all hope it will prove so, for the early crop was not of the quality one likes to handle. The numerous wedding decorations make a large demand for peonies, which is keeping the daily receipts well cleaned up.

There continues to be a line-up at the sweet pea counter and valley is selling well. Some houses report good business on lilies, while others say there is little demand for them.

With the large receipts of roses and carnations, there is little demand for the odds and ends of stock which find their way to the market. Choice specialties are good sellers, but indifferent material makes low returns.

Asparagus strings are scarce, but all other greens can be had in quantity.

Seeking His Fortune.

A number of the wholesale houses are this week regretting their confidence as reposed in one John Allwood, at Hudson, Mich. For some time he bought small quantities of stock in this market and paid with utmost promptness. For Decoration day nearly every house that he ever had dealings with received a big order and his standing was so good that not one thus far heard from questioned his credit. It was quite a shock to them to receive notes written from Windsor, Ont., a couple of days after Decoration day, of which the following is a sample:

"I am sorry to say that I am down and out for the present. I bought the greenhouse on land contract and I put over $1,500 into it. I could not get my money out of it and I have had to leave. I am going to Alaska to try my fortune there. My wife will have to try to sell the place, but she will never get what it is worth. I will pay you as soon as I can."

One wholesaler admits the hope that Mr. Allwood may dig up $700 in the Klondike, or elsewhere.

West Madison Street.

It does not take as long to go out West Madison street as it did in the days before the cable gave way to the trolley. It is only ten minutes' ride to H. F. Halle's.

Mr. Halle's work preparatory to opening a north side branch has not subtracted from the energy put into the west side store. Competition has multiplied in the years Mr. Halle has been on Madison street, but he still gets his share of the trade—and gets good prices; he handles good stock and will not cut to the level of smaller stores.

A step to the left, where Ogden avenue branches off, one finds Charlie Fisk, doing a good business behind his big window but nursing the idea that he ought to get back into the wholesale line. And, by the way, most of the retailers have felt the last season that the wholesalers have had decidedly the advantage, in hours, effort required, independence, etc.; they would feel differently were supplies steadily ahead of demand.

George Asmus says business is good at the old Schiller stand; it always is whenever there is any funeral work agoing on the west side.

Mrs. Anderson, who is on the bar formed by the junction of Madison and Colorado avenue, does a good trade and is saving money. Boston ferns are her specialty and she has the neighborhood full of them.

A half mile farther on H. N. Bruns has acquired the lot next door to his stand. It cost him $4,000 and looks cheap at the price. He has it fenced and Frank Oechslein, proprietor of the Garfield Park Flower Co., does both wholesale and retail business and is always busy. Just now he is in the rush of spring bedding plant trade, heavy in both departments, for the season is later this year than usual.

Various Notes.

Muir had one of the best wedding decorations of the season Monday, June 10. It was at St. James church and the Kenwood hotel, for the wedding of Marie Fitzgerald and Gustavus F. Swift, head of Swift & Co. Roses principally were used.

Sam Graff is here from Columbus. He has sold his interest in the business of Graff Bros. to his brother, William, and is looking for a new location.

This is club night. No special program is announced, but under the leadership of H. N. Bruns there always is something of interest.

Joseph Foerster says the demand for Beauties fell off with unusual suddenness at the end of last week, but he looks for it to begin again any minute, for there always has been a good demand for Beauties in June. C. L. Washburn says he subscribes to the paragraph in last week's REVIEW about the heaviest demand in June always being in the first part of the week, because the weddings usually are before Friday.

L. Coatsworth and F. F. Benthey were participants in the big skat tournament at the Coliseum Saturday and Sunday, when 2,500 players participated. Mr. Coatsworth was among the prize winners. W. F. Kasting, of Buffalo, also was a contestant.

E. H. Hunt says that though roses no longer show the ravages of thrips, evidently the growers still have their troubles with insects, or expect to have, for Monday they received orders from three local growers, each for a 10-gallon cask of To-bak-ine Liquid. These casks are $125 each.

Vaughan & Sperry received last week the first candidum lilies which have reached this market since Easter. They sold fairly well. Bassett & Washburn received a large lot of candidums Tuesday.

Referring to the many records which were broken by the Memorial day business, Kennicott Bros. Co. says that it is no unusual thing with them for May to exceed the months of Christmas and Easter. They say May always has been their biggest month and that June has been a close second, but since flowers were barred from the local public school commencements June has not been so good as formerly. They explain their big spring business by pointing to the quantities of peonies they have handled these many years.

You can count on John P. Risch to find in every situation something favorable to Killarney rose. This week he points out that it stands the heat better than any other variety on the market.

About a week before Decoration day lightning struck the 65-foot chimney of the George Harrer place at Morton Grove, now conducted by J. P. Brooks. The bricks were scattered all over the place and one house almost entirely demolished. The chimney has been repaired, but Mr. Brooks is not yet ready to reglaze. It is keeping him busy picking carnations these days.

W. J. Smyth finds business good enough at present to require the use of three telephones.

The E. F. Winterson Co. is making numerous changes about its store, one of the greatest being the construction of an inside stairway to connect the new seed and supply store on the street level with the basement cut flower section. In the basement a large room is being fitted up for the wire workers and this department of the business will be enlarged.

attention at present, the showing of blooms being especially good.

E. C. Amling says that Fred Weber's annual summer crop of Beauties is just coming on. For three years in succession Mr. Weber has had splendid success with Beauties timed for this date.

The Lake Forest Horticultural Society will have its first annual exhibition July 13. The exhibits will be by the local private gardeners.

The A. L. Randall Co. says the extent of the demand for commencement baskets is a surprise in the supply department. It exceeds their most sanguine expectations and next year they purpose to do some big business in this line.

Percy Jones says he received his first local peonies on Monday.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. reports an excellent demand for special roses. They cannot keep up with the call for the best grade of Killarney, which has led them to largely increase their planting for next year. Chatenay with stems three or four feet long also sells well and the best grade of Richmond continues in good request in spite of a largely stocked rose market.

The J. A. Budlong estate has finished planting chrysanthemums. They are cutting some fine roses. Business is steadily increasing and they would like to double their store space to provide for future development.

Wietor Bros. report business so brisk and collections so good that they have had to buy a new and larger safe.

Peter Reinberg is cutting the heaviest crop of roses in the history of the establishment.

C. M. McKellar says it is especially fitting that June is not only the season of blushing brides, but of the heaviest crop of cattleyas. The two are combining excellently this month.

Zech & Mann are receiving their annual spring crop of Easter lilies.

John Kruchten is rearranging his place preparatory to handling a big crop of peonies.

An interesting note on A. Lange's advertising in the daily papers will be found on another page of this issue.

ORANGE, N. J.

The regular monthly meeting of the New Jersey Floricultural Society was held June 7. Lager & Hurrell, of Summit, displayed a number of their natural hybrids, Cattleya Mendelii superbissima and Phalenopsis Cynthia. Julius Roehrs Co., of Rutherford, besides their usual orchid display, exhibited their new Rambler rose, Julius Roehrs. The usual contributions were made of flowers and plants from near-by estates. There was no paper read. J. B. D.

The New Jersey Floricultural Society did not hold its proposed exhibit of roses June 7 because of the late cool weather. There was, however, a creditable display of orchids, roses, etc., as follows: A large specimen palm from Sidney and Austen Colgate; vase of carnations, by William Bennett, gardener for A. C. Van Gaasbeck; vase of roses, by Peter Duff, gardener for J. Crossby Brown; a new rambler rose, grown by Julius Roehrs Co., of Rutherford; grand display of cut orchids from Lager & Hurrell, Summit; specimen palm, by Albert F. Larsen, gardener for Stewart Dickson; grand display of orchids, by Edward Thomas, gardener for George Coe Graves; vase of azalea and rhododendron blooms, by A. C. Caparn, gardener for Stewart Hartshorn, Short Hills; vase of gladioli and vase of aquilegia, by Max Schneider, gardener for Charles Hathaway.

A preliminary schedule was presented of the fall exhibition, to be held November 7 and 8.

I WATCH for the coming of the REVIEW each week and certainly get much pleasure and profit from reading it.—E. P. HALL, Shelbyville, Ky.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

The executive committee of the Illinois State Florists' Association met June 8 at the Leland hotel and revised the constitution of the association and appointed the advisory board which will be in charge of the experimental station at the University of Illinois, which was provided for in the appropriations made by the last general assembly.

The board will be composed of J. C. Vaughan, of Chicago; Willis N. Rudd, of Mount Greenwood; Frank J. Heintz, of Jacksonville; J. F. Ammann, of Edwardsville, and C. D. Gallantine, of Morrison.

The revision of the constitution as made by the executive board will be voted upon by the association at its next meeting before it becomes effective.

The members of the committee present at the meeting were: Prof. A. C. Beal, secretary of the association; William Heintz, of Jacksonville; A. R. Knowles,

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The pretty girls have nearly all graduated, and most of their older sisters who have made up their minds have been married, leaving a few scattered weddings and garden parties for the second half of June. The result on the market has been disastrous. Prices have receded steadily during the last week. The quantity of blooms has increased enormously under the influence of bright sunshine and the appearance of the local peony crop. Quality is on the decline. The features of the market are the weakness of carnations, the supply of this flower being very heavy and the support irregular; the increase in outdoor sweet peas, these of course being started in greenhouses or frames and now of fine quality; and the splendid demand for valley.

The change from southern to locally grown peonies has not at this writing especially affected the market, though it is probable that by the end of this week there will be a vast quantity of these flowers in the city. Dagger ferns are more plentiful. The new crop being in, prices have receded. Outdoor roses have not as yet made their appearance, though these flowers have but little effect on the market.

A New Bowling Trophy.

There are indications in all branches of the profession that the coming S. A. F. convention will be made memorable. Interest is thoroughly aroused. It is manifest in the offices, in the shops, in the greenhouses, and on the street. Everyone agrees that it is a matter of honor for Philadelphia to extend the hand of brotherly love to her guests next August. One of the first positive signs of interest in the coming convention appeared a few days ago in the window of Bailey, Banks & Biddle, silversmiths, at Twelfth and Chestnut streets. It was a handsome, solid silver cup, presented by the Whilldin Pottery

Co., of this city, as a trophy to be contested for in the inter-city bowling tournament to be held during convention week. When questioned about the terms of the competition, J. G. Whilldin, treasurer of the company, said that he left that matter entirely in the hands of the bowling committee, who would decide as they saw fit. Mr. Whilldin did not think that a contest lasting over a number of years would be popular. Inquiry regarding the plans of the bowling committee failed to discover any positive arrangement. It is assumed, however, that the new trophy will be awarded as first prize in the inter-city contest. It is pictured on page 15.

Various Notes.

John Westcott, reviewing the Decoration day business, said that the public is being educated to a higher standard in cut flowers for this holiday, a better grade being required and better prices paid than in former years. He thought the improvement in the cut flower business was more marked than in that of plants, owing possibly to the unfavorable season. Plants have, however, sold satisfactorily.

Visitors to the upper Wissahickon have enjoyed a magnificent sight on the hills overlooking this historic stream, where the Andorra Nurseries have two whole acres of rhododendrons in full bloom.

F. M. Smith, of Smith & Feters, Cleveland, was a visitor in this city recently.

Walter P. Stokes, in discussing the seed situation, said that the cold, wet spring caused an unprecedented demand for lima beans. Sweet corn, field corn and muskmelons are also heavy sufferers.

Continuing, Mr. Stokes said that the demand for vegetable plants, such as tomato, egg plant, etc., had completely cleared the benches of his Moorestown houses. Valley has sold exceptionally well during the last week.

George W. Carr, of Kingston, Pa., was in town a few days ago.

A local daily is authority for the statement that the bees are killing the drones and dragging them out of the hives. This is said to be an indication that the bees believe there will be no summer, as the execution of the drones usually takes place in the fall.

M. Rice is out of the city for a few days, but the touch of the master hand can be seen in every detail of his well arranged warehouse.

The Whilldin Pottery Co. reports an excellent season. The stock is lower than usual at this time, and it will take every effort to replenish it before the demand sets in late in the summer.

William P. Craig has handled his new fern, Nephrolepis Amerpohlil, with great skill. It is now in splendid condition. The fronds have been used in some of the choicest floral arrangements in New York and other cities, as well as here. The Julius Roehrs Co., Rutherford, N. J., exhibited a beautiful new rose, called Julius Roehrs, at the June meeting of the Florists' Club. It is a pleasing pink of the Wichuraiana type and attracted much favorable comment.

Edward Reid has been shipping some very choice stock of "all seasonable cut flowers."

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. have received an inquiry for their catalogue from Calcutta. Mr. Berkowitz pointed out some tiny plants in stoneware tubs that were full of vigor. The tubs were about an inch in diameter and the plants about four inches high.

H. Weiss & Son will devote their new houses at Hatboro entirely to carnations.

W. J. Sherry, of the Johnson Seed Co., reports an excellent demand lasting late into the season. He says that lima beans have required three and in some cases four plantings, making this seed extremely scarce. Field corn and muskmelons have also suffered from the wet season.

The rose show of the Germantown Horticultural Society, held last Monday evening, was destitute of outdoor roses. There was a good display of hardy perennials, shrubbery, indoor roses and plants. George Redels addressed the meeting, which was well attended, describing the exhibits.

Godfrey Aschmann reports an excellent spring business. The demand for scarlet sage, Vernon begonias, coleus and moonvines has been especially heavy.

William C. Smith has emptied three houses of Boston ferns since Easter.

D. Fuerstenburg considers the progress made by Florex Gardens, at North Wales, remarkable when the season is considered. Sixty-five men are at work there now.

H. H. Battles had some large orders for the American Medical Society at convention at Atlantic City last week.

It is believed that the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society's rose and peony shows will be held in Horticultural hall June 18.

Condition of crops is poor in this locality, owing to the cold, backward spring. The fruit will be an entire failure in southern Kansas. Vegetable gardening is poor, as we had to replant so many times, and the frost cut the crops down through the month of May. Without rain and the continuous cold weather makes everything very backward. The flower trade for Decoration day was good; in fact, better than any previous year. Owing to the backward spring the outdoor flowers were all bitten by frost. Cape jasmine flowers from southern Texas, carnations, roses and peonies were the main flowers for Dec-

DETROIT.

The Market.

There has been a decided improvement in the weather since the last report. Business remains about the same. Several wedding orders have been booked for this month. Funeral work keeps the market well cleaned up of all good stock.

Roses are of good quality. Kaiserin and La Detroit are improving with the advent of the warmer weather. Carnations are more plentiful than when last reported. Lawsons are getting bad around the edges. Sweet peas are still arriving in large lots and remain well cleaned up at from 50 cents to 75 cents. Marguerites are in good demand. Valley is one of the best sellers at the present time. The price ranges from 3½ cents to 4½ cents. Snapdragon also sells well. Ferns are scarce.

Club Meeting.

The last meeting of the Detroit Florists' Club was held June 5. The members turned out in larger numbers than usual, presumably to hear the president's paper.

Mr. Dilger's paper was a lengthy one, covering some thirty odd pages of paper. Our president, being a very modest man, naturally felt rather embarrassed at facing such a large audience. He spoke of the many radical changes that have taken place in our trade during the last fifty years, many of them not as apparent as in other trades. In comparing the heating systems, ventilators, cement benches and the whole iron construction houses of today with those of thirty or forty years ago, many changes were of course noticeable. In the making up of floral work, and the plants and flowers grown, many big changes have also taken place, but these are not so apparent. Formerly there was little done in the line of floral designs and baskets; everything was bouquets, made up about as stiffly as one could imagine.

The camellia was the leading flower in those days; in fact, it was to the florist of thirty years ago what the rose is to the florist of today. The carnation ranked next in favor; this plant was treated as almost hardy. It was mostly sold as a potted plant. The price of the flowers seems to have been about the same as at present. Violets were grown to some extent; the only known way of multiplying this plant was by separation. The wholesale price compared very closely with the price now. The essayist mentioned many varieties of flowers that were commonly used in those days for decorative as well as funeral work, among them sweet alyssum, eupatorium, bouvardia, Euphorbia scandens, etc. Poinsettias were grown about the same as now; in 1866 they were being sold in New York at $25 per hundred. The flowers of begonias were commonly used as edging for bouquets; begonias and creeping lycopodium were used as green in bouquets.

Mr. Dilger is of the opinion that ericas and calceolarias were grown better in former years than now. In cannas the gardener had only high varieties at his disposal. Hanging baskets were used extensively and have not changed in style or make-up. Roses were grown in all colors forty years ago, and although there has been a big advancement made in roses, still it would be a good plan for us to carry more varieties. - The propagation was done by making cuttings just as we do now.

Under the heading of "Slugs and Bugs," the essayist mentioned many that were common years ago. The rose slugs were among the worst of these pests and were only eliminated when the English sparrow was introduced into this country. The blue aphid, ant, red spider, greenfly, mealy bug and scale were also well known. Verbena rust was also classed as one of the worst enemies in former years.

Many varieties of bulbs were grown in olden times, some of them not used extensively in these days; for instance, crocus, snowdrops and bluebells, all of which do so well when planted out in lawns, helping to prolong the season of out-door flowers. Bulbs were imported from Holland, just as they are now. There has been a big advancement made in gladiolus. Amaryllis seems to be nearly extinct. Tuberoses were grown and used in great numbers in former years. Pelargoniums were also grown in large quantities, the different varieties comprising many beautiful colors, resembling the work of the painter more than nature. Geraniums were handled as being nearly hardy. Salvias and zinnias were also known. Hardy herbaceous and hardy shrubs were used.

Mr. Dilger's paper took nearly two hours to read; therefore a discussion of it was put off until the next meeting.

After adjournment a Dutch lunch was served to the members by a caterer. The whole was a treat by Mr. Dilger on the advent of his fiftieth birthday, Saturday, June 8. During the evening cigars were passed around in honor of a baby girl by August Von Boeselager, and also in honor of George Browne, Jr., born last week. H. S.

BOSTON.

The Market.

The market has been in a weak condition since Memorial day, but this week a good crop of June weddings, as well as the school exercises, will help to relieve the congestion. During last week business was far from good and values fell heavily, carnations in some cases going below the dollar mark. There is an ample supply of roses, including some nice Carnot and Kaiserin. Carnations are also very abundant, with a range of prices all the way from 75 cents to $3 per hundred. Sweet peas are selling well, and so is lily of the valley; of the latter some fine outdoor samples are still arriving. Gladioli, of the Gandavensis type, bring $1 to $1.50 per dozen. There is a fine supply of lilies. Peonies have not appeared in any quantity as yet. Some of the old crimson officinalis and single varieties, however, are coming in, but it will be some days before many doubles arrive, the season for these being very late. Dutch bulbous stock is over for the season. Some nice Spanish iris and Gladioli Blushing Bride are, however, seen.

any rhododendrons from being in season for the show June 8. Nevertheless there was a fine display of cut flowers and plants, which nearly filled the main hall. Farquhar & Co. were first with two wistarias in tubs, showing large, well flowered specimens. For twelve varieties hardy azaleas, six trusses of each, W. Whitman, M. Sullivan, gardener, was first and Mrs. A. W. Blake, J. L. Smith, gardener, second. W. Whitman also led for collection of tree peonies. Blue Hill Nurseries had first for thirty varieties of herbaceous plants, with a splendid collection.

Professor C. S. Sargent, Charles Sander, gardener, showed a large table of seedling tree peonies in a wide range of colors, including some beautiful things. For this meritorious collection a silver medal was awarded. Mr. Sander also showed a vase of the graceful Syringa pubescens.

James Crosbie, gardener for Mrs. J. W. Tufts, showed well grown specimens of the new yellow calceolaria mentioned in a recent REVIEW, which has been named Stuarti; also plants of one of the parents, C. Golden Gem. He was awarded a cultural certificate for a splendid specimen of Clerodendron Balfourianum.

Blue Hill Nurseries had twenty varieties of lilac and a good collection of aquilegia, Primula Sieboldi and late tulips. W. W. Rawson & Co. had a table of Darwin tulips and Mrs. E. M. Gill a nice display of carnations, tulips and other flowers. W. H. Heustis had 100 vases of branches of shrubs and trees.

Dr. C. G. Weld, W. C. Rust, gardener, had a fine vase of Fortin's lily of the valley, open air culture. Harvard Botanic Gardens, Robert Cameron, gardener, had a splendid collection of Rose, Bybloom, Breeder and other late tulips, also a table of herbaceous plants. J. E. Rothwell, Emil Johansson, gardener, had 100 vases of orchids, including fine odontoglossums and many hybrid cattleyas. R. & J. Farquhar & Co. had two large tables of late tulips in large variety, also a collection of violas, German iris, narcissi, aquilegias and a variety of herbaceous plants. They also showed a quantity of bougainvilleas and rhododendrons in pots. The finest exhibit for them was, however, a dozen of well-flowered plants of the beautiful new soft pink Spiraea Queen Alexandra. This received a silver medal and cannot fail to become popular commercially.

The backward season has rendered further changes of dates necessary at forthcoming exhibitions. The rhododendron show will now come June 15 and 16, the peony show June 22 and 23, while the rose and strawberry exhibition is postponed until June 29 and 30.

Various Notes.

Remember club meeting night, June 18, at 8 o'clock. The largest gathering of the year should be present to greet C. H. Totty. There is much business of importance to transact and every member should plan to attend. Refreshments for all, as usual.

John L. Smith, on the Mrs. A. W. Blake estate, Brookline, is the proud father of an 11½-pound boy, born June 4.

Thomas Pegler had among his shipments of carnations from S. J. Goddard, June 8, a flower of Mrs. Patten with a 4½-inch stem. We suppose some of these days carnations will sell at so much per foot, as Beauties do now.

Peirce Bros. say they are now clear of cutworms, which have done them an enormous amount of damage of late years. Sterilization of the soil did the trick.

The lilacs in the Arnold Arboretum were at their best June 9 this year. All have flowered remarkably well. All the trees and shrubs look splendid, thanks to the copious rains.

The leopard moth is now to be added to the list of our tree pests, some specimens having been found in Boston last week. Active work is now in progress against the various moth pests and elm leaf beetle. The destructive San Jose scale is being more widely distributed here each year.

Seedsmen report the present season as a most erratic one. While there has been a large volume of business, it has been less satisfactory than had been hoped for.

June weather up to date, while rather more genial than its two immediate predecessors vouchsafed us, is still colder than usual. Market gardeners are complaining of their crops being very late and in some cases resowing has been necessary.

NEWPORT, R. I.

Trade and Other Notes.

Decoration day business in plants and cut flowers far exceeded that of any previous occasion, both in volume and prices. The total absence of flowers outdoors rather helped the sale of other flowers as well as plants. The class of people that in former years depended for their supply on what they could pick up or would be freely given them from the open, this year in many cases purchased flowering plants and either placed these on the graves or had them planted there.

The prices of flowers were higher than usual, chiefly because of the scarcity of cut flowers in the local market, on account of an extraordinary demand for material for funeral work during the days just preceding Decoration day, and in the case of plants it was known almost to a certainty that, despite the unseasonable weather conditions then existing for outdoor planting, the demand would exceed that of former years. It was known, also, that only flowering plants in bloom would sell and that in the hands of many dealers a substantial percentage of the plants were not yet in bloom. The result was that nearly everything presentable in the shape of a flowering plant was sold at a good price.

Newport is a peculiar place in many respects. Many of the graves in the Island cemetery are occupied by what is earthly of many who were not permanent residents of this city and by many having today no relatives living here, but all of these graves are kept in beautiful order and it invariably is the case that dealers or florists receive orders to decorate these graves elaborately on Decoration day. Whatever our opinions may be concerning the growing practice of converting the whole surface of the tops of graves into beds of plants, we must admit that its adoption is calling for large numbers of plants that otherwise could not find places in cemeteries. Dwarf begonias, red Vernon mostly, are used in making crosses and in planting in other forms of arrangement on graves. Alternanthera in variety is used for like purposes, although in recent years, since the introduction of Vernon begonias into common use, alternanthera was somewhat neglected. This year, however, there seems to be a desire to turn to it again, and that, no doubt, because of its dwarf habit and the ease with which it can be kept in condition appropriate to the surroundings, as well as its brilliant coloring.

White geraniums are not used in anything like the quantity they used to be. A few years ago growers took particular pains to have large numbers of white geraniums in condition for cemetery work on Decoration day; now it is red more than pink and white combined. Lobelia seems to have lost favor also to a considerable extent. English ivy is getting more popular year after year for this kind of work. Even after the experience of the last winter, when eighty per cent of the ivy was winter-killed, there was more of a demand for it than ever before, and this is without question gratifying because of the fact that few things seem so appropriate and yet so richly decorative for cemetery work as English ivy.

No sooner was the rush of Decoration day over than orders came in thick and fast for bedding stock. Geraniums were first in more ways than one; they were first called for and first to be sold out. The demand for only plants in bloom for Decoration day had the effect of causing somewhat of a scarcity of geraniums in bloom towards the end of the week. Salvias are more in demand than usual, with the supply not fully equal to it. Salvia seed, especially that of Bonfire, in a great many cases failed to germinate satisfactorily this spring. There is yet a great deal of work to be done in the bedding line, with prospects of an insufficiency of material for the completion of the work. In every place in any way like Newport there are always persons who for one reason or another are late in finally deciding on the planting of their grounds—so late, in fact, that many a time nothing remains in the local market for them to purchase. Remembering those conditions, then, it may be to the advantage of those having an overplus of stock to still continue taking reasonable care of it, keeping in pots a while longer in anticipation of a call from some such place as this.

Out at Oakland Farm, Alfred G. Vanderbilt's country place, Alexander Adam, the gardener, is actively engaged in preparations for the embellishment of that place on a scale of magnificence unequalled in these parts. These preparations include getting ready for planting a roof garden three-quarters of an acre in extent. All the plants will be specimens in 6-inch pots, which will be plunged in the soil. When these show signs of weakness they will be removed and others taken from a large stock held in reserve to fill their places. Thus all the plants in the garden will be in bloom from start to finish. It will take many thousands for the work.

The effects of the severity of the last winter are still coming to light on all sides. At the Astor place, Beechwood, James Boyd took particular pride in his nectarine trees, and he was well justified in so doing, because they were as fine a lot of well trained and well conditioned trees, after the crop of fruit was harvested last year, as any person could wish to see. This year, after the work of pruning and tying in had been done with care, the trees flowered in almost a normal way in about a week thereafter. However, every tree in the house was found to be dead. The cause of this seems to have been the wet condition of the soil encompassing the roots of the trees, and the severe frost consequently freezing the roots to an extent past recovery. MAX REILLY.

TUBEROUS BEGONIAS.

Will you please tell us how to handle tuberous begonias from time of planting to blooming, the proper soil and full particulars? S. C. C.

Tuberous begonias, if seedlings, prefer a light and moderately rich compost, half turfy loam and one-fourth each old, dried cow manure and leaf-mold, to which some sand has been added. They should not be potted very firmly. Similar compost will suit the dry bulbs which you may have. In starting these, we prefer to lay them in flats of sand until well sprouted, then transferring them to 5-inch or 6-inch pots. They will need shading from the sun at all times, or scalded leaves will be the result. Fumigation will be needed to keep thrips in check, which soon disfigure the young growths if allowed to secure any foothold. A light house, freely ventilated and kept at 50 degrees to 55 degrees as a minimum will grow good begonias. Do not spray them overhead and feed with manure water when established in their blooming pots. C. W.

The business of L. C. Hecock, on Lodi street, has increased to such an extent that larger quarters have become necessary, and the real estate on Lodi street being too expensive, the firm has bought several acres at stop 6 on the Lorain branch of the C. & S. W. R. R., where the capacity for growing purposes will be two or three times as great as formerly. The firm name has also been changed to the L. C. Hecock Floral Co. The company has leased a piece of ground next to where Geha is building his fruit store on East Broad street, and is going to build a commodious building for floral display. The business office will also be in this building. The property on Lodi street will be used for dwellings. They intend to cut a street through to Monroe court. This will improve this part of the city greatly.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

Business conditions seem to be satisfactory, with many wedding orders on the books. Funeral work still holds out well and there are quite a few commencements calling for decorations.

Last week's storm cut off the outdoor blooms. Roses are coming in fairly well; some are mildewed, but not enough to hurt the sale. Carnations are abundant. Peonies are at last coming in large quantities and can be had at any price. Sweet peas are plentiful. Field daisies are sold by the thousands. Orange blossoms find ready sale.

Various Notes.

Richard Vincent, Jr., & Sons Co., of White Marsh, lost over 1,000 panes of glass in the hail storm of June 5. George Cook and Bland Bros., of Arlington, lost many lights. C. Gregorius, C. B. Hoffman and J. Oler were among those whom the hail struck. Kennedy Bros., of Pikesville, lost about 500 panes of glass.

J. J. Cummings reports that business is rushing.

C. M. Wagner, of Woodbrook, has a fine collection of gloxinias. He is growing some Harrisii seedlings and at present shows some fine specimens five feet high, with beautiful blooms.

Tischinger Bros., in Lexington market, dispose of thousands of pot plants every season.

Thomas Vincent is having a large number of orders for decorations for the June brides.

Edward Kress is offering two of his greenhouses for sale and will erect six dwelling houses about July 1.

Vegetable Forcing.

THE shortage of tomato plants is this year the greatest ever known and extends to every section of the country.

THE U. S. Department of Agriculture, in one of its recent bulletins, says "the only satisfactory basis on which to sell any vegetable crop is that of weight."

THE sale of vegetable plants has been greater than ever this year. Practically every florist who handles any kind of spring plants can do well with vegetable plants in season.

EVERY florist producing stock for a local trade should plan to have part of a bench of lettuce for next winter; it pays, and it brings many people to you who do not buy flowers frequently.

B. E. WADSWORTH, Danville, Ill., reports that while he was advertising tomato plants on this page of the REVIEW he sold "over 700,000 plants, mostly to canning factories in the west, one buyer placing a single order for 125,000."

THE Maryland Agricultural Experiment Station, at College Park, has issued a bulletin which will be of interest to every trucker or grower of vegetables under glass who sends for it. The title is "Marketing Fruit and Truck Crops."

VEGETABLE MARKETS.

CHICAGO, June 12.—Cucumbers, 25c to 90c doz.; leaf lettuce, 40c to 45c case.

NEW YORK, June 10.—Cucumbers plenty, and meeting with a fair outlet at former prices, except a few fancy marks, which command a premium. Mushrooms selling slowly, unless fancy, when prices are occasionally exceeded. Tomatoes dull. Cucumbers, 40c to 65c doz.; mushrooms, 10c to 50c lb.; tomatoes, 15c to 20c lb.

BOSTON, June 10.—Owing to cool weather, all hothouse vegetables continue to sell well. Beets, $1 to $1.50 doz. bunches; carrots, 75c to $1 doz. bunches; cucumbers, $2 to $3.50 box; lettuce, 25c to 75c doz.; escarolle, $1 doz.; romaine, $1 doz.; chicory, $1 doz.; tomatoes, 25c to 35c lb.; parsley, $2.50 box.

WHITE FLY ON VEGETABLES.

The white fly is now an established pest in almost every greenhouse used for growing tomatoes, cucumbers, melons and other broad-leaved plants requiring warm temperatures. It is also present in many cooler houses devoted to vegetable crops, such as radishes, lettuce and cauliflower, but increases at a comparatively slow rate and does little harm. It is occasionally abundant outside during summer in the vicinity of propagating houses and other greenhouse establishments, being chiefly found on salvias, petunias, geraniums and other broad or soft leaved plants, and has even been noticed in quantity on strawberry foliage. It does little harm outside, and is not likely to increase to any great extent, as it is apparently unable to survive our winters without glass protection and artificial warmth. It is a particularly formidable nuisance to the tomato forcer, and must be diligently controlled if profitable yields are expected. While very resistant to ordinary insecticides, it, fortunately for the grower, readily yields to hydrocyanic acid gas. Multitudes of trials have established, says Dr. F. W. Van Fleet, in the Rural New-Yorker, that in ordinary greenhouses the most practical dose is two and one-half ounces ninety-eight per cent potash cyanide for each 1,000 cubic feet of air space, to be decomposed in a mixture of three ounces each commercial sulphuric acid and water.

Directions have repeatedly been given in these columns, but it may be well to repeat that the cyanide should be weighed out in parcels of two and one-half ounces, and each lot securely wrapped in paper. The acid should previously be poured in the needed quantity of water, making the dilution in an earthen vessel, and distributed in a sufficient number of jars, not over fifty feet apart, properly to distribute the gas. At night, when the plants and air are reasonably dry and the temperature not over 60 degrees, the packages of cyanide are rapidly dropped in the jars of diluted acid, beginning with the one farthest from the door, which is immediately closed and locked when the last package is in. The operator should on no account lose a moment in getting himself outside and should avoid deep breathing when distributing the cyanide, as the gas is as deadly in its effects on humans as on insects. The paper wrapping of each parcel delays action sufficiently to allow an active operator to distribute the cyanide in a long house without danger, but he should never turn back or delay after commencing the operation.

The house may be entered in an hour after the fumigation if first ventilated from the outside by opening doors or ventilators, but would usually better be left closed until morning. Complete darkness and comparative coolness are necessary, when the gas is used in this strength, or there may be serious injury to plants. Never use it during daylight or when the plants are covered with moisture. The computation of space is made on the basis of the empty house; no allowance being made for the room occupied by benches or plants.

WELLSTON, MO.—Henry Raterman, of the Raterman Poultry Farm, announces that hereafter his establishment will be conducted under the name of the Raterman Floral Co.

ERIE, PA.—The Erie Floral Co. has just started a new two horse-power Standard pumping engine. Although they have city water throughout their establishment, and have a steam pump which they use while their boilers are in operation, they find it advantageous to use a Standard pumping engine for pumping their manure water. Mr. Wise, the superintendent, is delighted with the performance of his new machine. The Schluraff Floral Co., having seen this pumping engine in operation, have placed their order for a similar one for use in their new establishment.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., Henry W. Wood, Richmond, Va.; First Vice-Pres., Charles Burge, Toledo, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 25th annual meeting will be held at New York City, June 26 to 27, 1907.

THE seedsmen visiting Europe this year are more numerous than usual.

THE acreage of onion sets at Los Angeles has been slightly increased this year.

COUNTER trade is dead at present; too late for seeds, too early for insecticides.

PHILADELPHIA seedsmen report an unprecedented call for lima beans, caused by the necessity for replanting.

BOSTON seedsmen say that the season has been a long, if erratic, one, but not so satisfactory, on the whole, as was expected when it opened.

THE June report of the Iowa Crop Bureau estimates corn area planted at 103 per cent and condition of crop 88, as compared with 99 per cent last year.

THE death of Otto Schwill, Sr., one of the best known of southern seedsmen, which occurred at Memphis, June 10, is reported in the obituary column in this issue.

THE seedsmen at Philadelphia report an unusually prolonged, if somewhat intermittent, season and say that in spite of the unfavorable influences the aggregate results are fairly satisfactory.

A LOCAL paper at Des Moines, in reporting the organization of the Iowa Seed Dealers' Association, says its purpose is to prevent outside mail order concerns from flooding the state with poor and adulterated seeds. "Iowa for Iowans" is the motto of every Hawkeye editor.

THE Cleveland Seed Co. is suing the Hoopeston Canning Co., Hoopeston, Ill., for $529 said to be due for seed corn, the canners refusing to settle until a set-off has been allowed for failure to deliver the full amount of the order, an advance in price having occurred. The case is on trial in Danville, Ill.

A POINTER to the seed trade is the advance in white commercial or grocery beans, which have made a considerable jump in value within the last fortnight, as a result of reports from many directions that the crop will be from a reduced acreage, and of such a late plant-

BULBS

ADAPTABLE SOIL IN AMERICA

BY

D'ALCORN & SON, Virginian Bulb Farm, PORTSMOUTH, VA.

We beg to submit you our list of prices of Bulbs that will grow and increase in any part of this country. We have cut out all those that will not pay to grow; for instance, all the double varieties of daffodils and narcissus are absolutely useless if once grown here, therefore those offered are from our English farm and are well adapted for forcing. All prices are for top grade, but we can supply seconds at half price if desired. As a stimulus to florists to grow Bulbs we will gladly give cultural directions as far as 25 years' practical experience will enable us.

Visitors to the Jamestown Exposition should take a County street car and alight at corner of Godwin and Columbia street, about 300 yards from our nurseries. Our object in offering these Bulbs is because we are overstocked and having only colored labor we cannot get all the flowers to market. The Bulbs are perfectly true and healthy and will certainly pay you better than anything you can grow. Why, then, send your money to Holland? These flowers are without doubt becoming more popular annually, as nothing can be grown outside so cheaply, and you will find it profitable to you to grow them for your local trade and to force a succession also. However many you buy you will want more next season and you will never regret spending $100 in this department. You will have some to sell in a few years when every florist will want to buy.

We ship the majority of our Bulbs from August to October. Accounts due at 100 days, 2½ per cent for cash in 30 days, or 5 per cent cash with order. Complaints must be made on receipt of goods.

CUP VARIETIES

Sir Watkin. Too much can not be said in praise of this, many prefer it to Emperor. It is quite a lady's favorite, free bloomer and splendid forcer. We have the largest stock in America and therefore are the cheapest. Stock absolutely true, strongly recommended.....	10.00	1.00
Barri Conspicuous, crystallized creamy perianth, crimson edged cup. A most delightful flower, often sold as Virginian Beauty. We have the largest stock in the States of this charming flower. It thrives wonderfully in any soil or situation, wet or dry, North or South, it increases faster than any and will easily return the outlay the following spring. We want every florist in America to grow this and Sir Watkin and offer cheap to induce you.	4.75
Queen Bess, the earliest of all. We think we are the only growers of this. Our stock of this is not true and is not offered so, it is offered at a very absurd price.....	5.00

DARWINS

These are our specialty. We had the honor of supplying these to Mrs. Roosevelt at the opening of the Jamestown Exposition. She said,—"We have nothing so lovely in the gardens at the White House," and has ordered some of the bulbs. The varieties selected by her were No. 20 and No. 25. This is sure to create a fashion for these neglected but magnificent tulips, so distinct from the ordinary. The Florist's Review, May 16, says "Messrs. D'Alcorn & Son, Portsmouth, have been sending some most splendid tulips to Philadelphia this week."

PEONIES

We have but 1000 roots here for experiment, but have one of the finest collections in Great Britain. We have traveled many countries to buy anything out of the common. Ours were only planted in this country January 5, 1907, and yet we can prove we made 25c off every bloom. What florist can say this, although advertising up to 1200 varieties? There are a vast number catalogued but we would not like to say there are over 70 distinct sorts. We list the best and only those worth a man's attention who wishes to make a profit off them and not a hobby. Ready in November. 50c each.

We can and will with pleasure quote any other Bulbs or flower roots cheap. We have everything that is hardy, from winter Aconites to Peonies and Lilies, but have not space to quote here. We sell 250 at 1000 rate and we solicit your kind favors, but orders under $5 are not solicited. Please compare our prices and tell us if in any one item you can buy at less. We have the goods, they are for sale and we consider we should effect big sales at the prices, otherwise we should not go to the trouble and expense we are doing. Rest assured we are headquarters and cannot be beaten for price with quality. In conclusion, we would point out there is money in growing each and every one of the Bulbs catalogued here. The biggest future is before Bulbous flowers; nothing so good and so early can be grown at the price, and the public are taking to them in preference to Roses and Carnations. Each year proves this. It cannot be overdone. England grows a thousand times as many as are grown here and there is no glut. Get in it before your neighbor.

ing, subsequent to other delayed operations on the farm which must take precedence of bean planting, as to carry the date of the bean harvest to near the frost period.

THE trend of the mail-order seed trade seems to be westward.

A BALTIMORE seedsman says that in that vicinity there is no difficulty in placing any supplies of pole lima beans.

THE McMorran-Gray Co., Port Huron, Mich., has a branch at Harbor Beach and this season has added one at Rose City, Mich.

D'ALCORN & SONS, bulb growers at Portsmouth, Va., feel especially pleased with the receipt of an order for bulbs of Darwin tulips from Mrs. Roosevelt; their flowers were used at the time of the opening of the Jamestown exposition and her order followed.

THE A. E. McKenzie Seed Co., Brandon, Manitoba, is in need of extra space to handle its increasing business. Changes made during the summer will give them a greatly enlarged store and office space. They handle cut flowers and plants as well as seeds and the usual allied lines.

THE fall bulb lists are beginning to make their appearance. In spite of the fact that the Hollanders who visit this country report taking orders in greater numbers each year, and the crops in Holland are said to be not increasing, the American dealers who make bulbs a specialty are steadily increasing their import orders.

It does not take De Giorgi Bros. long to make a move when once they make up their minds to it. Late in May they determined to remove their base of operations from 81 Dearborn avenue to Council Bluffs, Ia., and on May 30 they notified the trade that the change had been effected. They intend to do a general mail-order seed business on a larger scale than heretofore.

At the banquet of members of firms founded over 100 years ago, held at the Bellevue-Stratford, Philadelphia, June 6, two seed houses were represented. F. W. Bruggerhof represented J. M. Thorburn & Co., of New York, and Burnet Landreth and Burnet Landreth, Jr., represented the Landreth Seed Co., Bristol, Pa. Mr. Landreth, Sr., is president of the Association of Centenary Firms and sat at the head of the table. The menu was elaborate and included Thorburn potatoes and Landreth romaine salad.

or washed out by the almost daily rains of the last six weeks, and what has grown has been seriously retarded by the cold, damp soil. Really, the crop does not promise one-third of what would have been considered a reasonable estimate at the time of drilling seed in April and early May. The prospect here is really quite calamitous, and so it is with almost everything.

The corn crop certainly will in many instances be so delayed as to suffer exceedingly both from dry weather in July and August, and possibly by being caught by frost before it is matured. A month's delay in a corn crop makes its maturity questionable.

In sending in a renewal of subscription for the REVIEW, June 10, a well-known seed grower writes: "We are glad to find your columns devoted to the seed trade becoming more extended and, therefore, more valuable to us every week."

PESSIMISTIC.

A seed grower in Michigan writes: "When the time comes in the autumn and winter for shipping out seeds, it will be deeply interesting to note the percentages of deliveries made on orders for peas, beans, corn and many small seeds which are being taken at prices already appearing ridiculously low in view of present crop conditions, both at home and abroad. These crops, when harvested in, will be so clearly far under the average of production that only one result can be looked for, that being a cutting down of deliveries by growers to twenty-five per cent, the buyers finding themselves left high and dry to look around for the deficient seventy-five per cent of many things hard, if not impossible, to get at any price." Certainly an average delivery of twenty-five per cent on the lines mentioned would be a misfortune of no

BURRELL'S MELON ACREAGE.

In the REVIEW of May 30 there appeared a note on D. V. Burrell's operations with a steam plow, taken from a Colorado newspaper. The reporter made it appear that Mr. Burrell was planting with melons, for seed, all the land he was plowing. This is what he himself says about it:

"I believe in advertising and, while I confess I am some like the one who said, 'Say something about me; something good if you can, but for goodness' sake, say something,' yet when it comes to planting 3,000 acres of melons for seed in one field I wish to be excused. I have only a few over 600 acres of melons all told, and these are planted in many different places.

REAPPRAISEMENTS.

The Board of General Appraisers at the New York custom house announced the following reappraisement June 8:

SEEDS.—From the Mangelsdorf Bros. Co., Nimes, exported February 25, 1907; entered at New York. File No. 44966. Invoice No. 8721. Findings of Sharretts, G. A.: Celery, Golden Paris Self-blanching; entered at 72s, advanced to 100s per cwt.

DANISH SEED CROPS.

Hjalmar Hartmann & Co., Copenhagen, Denmark, write under date of May 30: "As far as the cauliflower is concerned, the plants for this year's crop have overwintered fairly well, but the cabbage heads planted November last, especially the Danish Roundhead (short), have taken damage owing to black frost, and thirty to forty per cent of the heads died off, so that it may influence seriously the quantity of the crop of seeds."

MILLS MOVES WEST.

The F. B. Mills Co., the headquarters of which are at Rose Hill, N. Y., has arranged for the opening of a branch at Washington, Ia., where F. B. Mills, president of the concern, has spent some time lately in arranging details. A brick warehouse, 40x100 and four stories high, with a switch from the C., M. & St. P. R. R., will be built, work already having commenced. Mr. Mills says the opening of the branch is due to the rapid development of the western business and his conviction that a larger proportion of the trade can be secured by a western house than would be possible for one in New York.

The F. B. Mills business at Rose Hill is twenty years old. A general seed and plant trade is carried on. To a reporter at Washington, Ia., Mr. Mills said that of this year's catalogue 750,000 copies were printed and next year's edition

MICHIGAN CONDITIONS.

M. B. Gray, treasurer of the McMorran-Gray Co., Port Huron, Mich., writes:

"We are planting more peas than usual this season, but the unusual conditions cause us anxiety. Some peas are still being planted, but we fear they are apt to suffer from the hot weather next month. The planting, which began about a month ago, has been desultory and the growth slow. All peas will be late this season, probably three weeks, at least.

"On account of the surpluses in the country we have cut down the amount of beans we are planting this season. We could place almost any quantity at reasonable prices, but the orders are hard to get."

The Market.

As regards Memorial day, we all had the largest business ever known here. The writer believes that in the aggregate fully twice as many flowers could have been sold. All our florists, figuring on the practical absence of outdoor stock, had made what we thought to be ample arrangements for greenhouse flowers to meet all demands; but when the rush came on Wednesday, everything went. None of the craft here realized that any such trade as we had could be possible under any circumstances; the customers simply kept coming in droves, and cleaned out everything in sight. Good prices were obtained, as in all such rushes the buyer is so delighted to get anything that any charge in reason is cheerfully paid. No such business was ever before done here on a holiday. The weather continues cold, and trade with all keeps right along, very satisfactory indeed. The last few days it has rained almost continually, which must have done considerable harm, but no one complains. Funeral work is of very large

Cold Storage Lilies

All Live and Up-to-date Florists Grow These

The forcing of cold storage lilies is no longer an experiment. If you have not already grown some of these we can refer you to hundreds of florists who make a success of this method and have lilies "all the year round"—the same as Lily of the Valley.

Our lilies are bought for and placed in cold storage for the express purpose of delivering bulbs in the summer time.

Lilium longiflorum and giganteum take about two months to bloom from time of planting from cold storage; speciosum from five to six months, so that longiflorum wanted for Thanksgiving and Christmas should be planted about Oct. 1, and speciosum and auratum about July 1.

We have limited quantities of the following varieties on hand and offer subject to being unsold and at the prices named. Will hold not later than Oct. 1 for our customers without any additional charges for cold storage. ORDER TODAY.

Monday evening, June 3, was certainly a red letter occasion with our club, for, by special invitation of the Fifth Avenue Floral Co., we passed a most enjoyable evening at its greenhouses. 000 children supplied. James McKellar told us of the committee's plans for the Buckeye Lake picnic July 17. This affair promises to surpass the great success of last year, when over 100 attended. There will be sports and games of all kinds, with prizes. At this meeting Frank Kemp, who is with the Clover Hill Greenhouses, was elected an active member. The secretary of the club announced the winners of the point total prizes, for the winter season, as follows: I. D. Siebert, with 123 points, $5; R. A. Currie, with eighty-three points, $3, and Sherman F. Stephens, with sixty points, $2. Plans were perfected for a rose and strawberry show on June 11. The business meeting over, the hospitable Fifth Avenue Floral Co. entertained the club with a fine collation, after which music, games with prizes, and a very enjoyable social evening quickly brought the hour to midnight.

Various Notes.

Mayer & Guthke, who have for the last twenty-six years been the agents here for Landreth's seeds, report a most satisfactory season, although the trade has come late.

The firm of Graff Bros. will be changed to William Graff, Samuel Graff withdrawing and going to Chicago. This firm certainly has a very fine business here, and it is continually increasing.

C. A. Roth has been busy lately; he says that the trade of Memorial day was by far the best ever done in Columbus. White stocks at $1 a dozen were a leader with him.

The annual "posey party" was held last week by the Home for Friendless Children, the object being to have the florists and other friends donate plants and seeds enough for the grounds. As usual, they received plenty for the purpose.

The Columbus Floral Co., although only started a few weeks, has been doing a very good business, especially in flowering plants. The Memorial day trade of the firm was twice what was expected.

George Bauman, who makes a specialty of supplying the trade here with ferns and other green stock, reports the demand and sales for Memorial day larger than ever before.

The Clover Hill Greenhouses did an enormous business for Memorial day. They have the transient business at Green Lawn cemetery. The writer, who was there on the holiday, was surprised at their great business.

John Allston, a respected colored man, who for thirty years has been in the employ of the Livingston Seed Co., died suddenly this week. ZERO.

NORTH YAKIMA, WASH.—J. C. Campbell, who has been with the North Yakima and Wapato Nurseries as Mr. Kelly's right-hand man, has purchased from Mr. Kelly an interest in the company. The firm has enjoyed a large business this spring, and is proud of the fact that less than two per cent of its stock was questioned by the inspector.

G. W. Oliver, of the Department of Agriculture, Washington, is making his annual tour of the Pacific coast. His observations lead him to believe that the coast will in time supply a large proportion of the Easter lily bulbs used by the trade. Several of the growers to whom lily seed was sent for trial three years ago have made very gratifying progress. Not the least important feature of their crops of growing lilies is the absence of the disease that has caused so much loss to lily forciers. He observed that lilies with such clean, deep green foliage as appeared in the California trial lots were never seen in Bermuda.

Old burlap sacks laid on the ground make an effective mulch. While of course such a mulch does not feed the plants, it has a number of advantages over a manure mulch. The two thicknesses of burlap in a sack will conserve the moisture in the soil even better than a 3-inch mulch of manure. There will be practically no weed growth. And the sacks can be so quickly removed and replaced that frequent examinations of the soil are encouraged.

I have economized considerably in water and labor during long droughts by using this mulch. Have also used the burlap over manure mulches that had become thin, or to reinforce mulches on plants occupying especially dry places on hillsides, with excellent results. The sacks can be quickly removed if necessary upon the arrival of heavy rains. When the burlap has rotted it may be made a helpful ingredient of the compost heap.

Where the burlap may be objectionable to the eye it can readily be obscured by a light covering of leaf-mold or similar material.

From observations made on this part of the Pacific coast, it is evident that there will not be much building of greenhouses indulged in for the growing of flowers for the coming season. This is to a great extent due to the stringency of the money market, together with the fact that the wholesalers in the vicinity of San Francisco have not had an especially prosperous season and the demand has been almost entirely gratified, with no immediate prospects of its being otherwise. This does not mean to say that the growers have not made any money or that they have had much trouble to dispose of their wares. Those who make a practice of shipping all or a greater portion of their flowers have had a very good year, but among those who depended entirely on local orders there has been some complaint, both as to the prices secured and the difficulties in disposing of stock. With fancy stock there has not been, and there is not now, a surplus, but with second quality flowers the growers have had some difficulty in disposing of all of them at fair prices. Here, again, those who cater to shipping orders have had the advantage, and a great deal of stock that would have brought but a fraction of its value in town has been forwarded to other places at good, paying prices.

But to return to contemplated improvements among the fraternity, I have not heard of over half a dozen growers who contemplate building this season, and they are all among the smaller growers. A great deal of overhauling, repairing and replanting will be accomplished during the summer and fall. It seems that fewer roses will be produced than ever this coming season, as many

The fifth annual meeting of the Pacific Coast Nurserymen's Association will be held at Salem, Oregon, July 10 to 12, in connection with the Salem Cherry Fair, under the auspices of the Marion County Horticultural Society. There will be present at this meeting F. A. Huntley, Commissioner of Horticulture of the State of Washington; W. K. Newell, president, and H. M. Williamson, secretary, of the Oregon State Board of Horticulture; H. C. Atwell, president, and E. R. Lake, secretary, of the Oregon State Horticultural Society; John Isaac, secretary, and probably Edward M. Ehrhorn, deputy commissioner of the California Horticultural Commission; C. I. Lewis, horticulturist, and A. B. Cordley, entomologist, from the State Agricultural College at Corvallis, besides a large attendance of nurserymen, seedsmen, inspectors and fruit-growers. This promises to be one of the most interesting meetings the society has held and there will be the finest display of cherries ever shown on the Pacific coast, as a large number of silver cups have been offered as premiums. F. W. Power, of the Oregon Nursery Co., Salem, is president of the Pacific Coast Nurserymen's Association.

FRUIT TREE LAW.

A leading California nurseryman sends the following summary of the present fruit tree law in that state:

Under the law as amended last winter, it is provided that, "It shall be unlawful for any person, persons, firm or corporation, acting either as principal or agent, to sell to any person, persons, firm or corporation any fruit tree or fruit trees representing same to be of a certain kind, variety and description and thereafter to deliver to such purchaser in filling such order and in completing such sale a fruit tree or fruit trees of a different kind, variety or description than the kind, variety or description of such fruit tree or fruit trees so ordered and sold. And any persons violating any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be fined in a sum not less than $50 nor more than $500, or by imprisonment in the county jail not less than twenty days or more than six months, or by both fine and imprisonment.

Prosecution under this act may be commenced at any time within seven years from the time of the delivery of such fruit tree or fruit trees mentioned in section 1 of the law which is quoted above.

The nurseryman adds: "It would seem unsafe to sell any but own-grown stock with a law of this kind in force, and even then errors by employees are likely to prove expensive."

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Conditions in San Francisco have not improved much since last accounts, and from present prospects we are about to face a long, quiet summer. Business for Memorial day was only fair, except for shipping orders, which in some cases were very good this season. But in a general way the transient trade was light. The street car strike is yet in force, and this, probably more than anything else, was the potent factor in the case. Ninety thousand union men and their families have declared their intentions of not patronizing the street railroads of San Francisco until the strike is ended, and as there was no other way to get to the various cemeteries, unless by wagon, a majority of the usual visitors stayed at home and the florists suffered more than anyone else in consequence.

The prices of all kinds of stock are about the same as those quoted for several weeks previous to Memorial day.

Various Notes.

R. D. Hunter, of the Germain Seed Co., of Los Angeles, has just left town after having been here several days.

William Cox, of the Cox Seed Co., is residing at present in Oakland, during the remodeling of his new residence at Ashbury Heights.

The Realty Syndicate has donated several thousand shrubs to the city of Oakland to be used in adorning the parks of the town.

The closing of the schools in the town of Berkeley has made a busy week for the florists in that town. H. M. Sanborn reports a heavy demand for fancy stock of all kinds.

C. C. Morse & Co. have commenced the erection of several new greenhouses at their grounds at Glen Echo. They contemplate many improvements in the near future.

Thomas O'Neil, of Haywards, will embark heavily in the growing of blue gums. He anticipates a big demand for that article during the coming season.

DULUTH, MINN.—W. W. Seekins recently secured a lease for ninety-nine years upon the corner of Third avenue east and Superior street, where he will erect a building at a cost of $18,000. The building will be of brick, eighty feet frontage on Superior street, and forty feet deep. This will be divided into three store rooms, one 43x40, which will be used by Mr. Seekins, and the other two, 18x40, which will be rented. There will also be two store rooms on Michigan street. In the rear of the Superior street store rooms will be a greenhouse, 43 1/2x60 feet. Mr. Seekins also contemplates making other improvements in his establishment this season, and expects to devote the greenhouses at Hunter's Park entirely to the growing of roses.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSEYMEN.

Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Vice-Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 32d annual convention will be held at Detroit, Mich., June 12 to 14, 1907.

W. L. TAYLOR is contemplating starting a nursery at Mandan, N. D.

THE W. W. Barnard Co., Chicago, is steadily adding to its nursery southwest of the city.

NURSEYMEN will find much of interest on the Pacific Coast page of the REVIEW each week.

A NOTICE of the approaching meeting of the Pacific Coast Nurserymen's Association will be found on page 46 of this issue.

W. P. STARK, of Louisiana, Mo., has been appointed, by Governor Folk, a member of the Missouri State Board of Horticulture.

C. W. CARMAN, who has had charge of the Lawrence Nursery Co. interests at Fort Madison, Ia., has removed with his family to Lawrence, Kan.

THE Tampico Fruit and Nursery Co., just incorporated at St. Paul, is organized to do a real estate business and its nursery interests are only incidental.

CHRISTIANSON & SON, at Hutchinson, Minn., are steadily increasing their business and have this season secured fifteen acres of land to add to their nursery.

THE annual meeting of the American Peony Society, to be held at Ithaca, N. Y., has been postponed to June 27 and 28, when it is thought the blooms will be open, ten days behind the usual flowering period there.

NURSEYMEN should note that there is a great increase in the demand for box for edging and remember that it is called for in larger sizes than was formerly the case. Box is easily propagated from cuttings.

THE plant and tree label business established at Derry, N. H., by Benjamin Chase, and successfully carried on by him for nearly forty years, will hereafter be conducted as the Benjamin Chase Co., of which Benjamin Chase is president and John C. Chase treasurer.

THE nurseryman is like the cobbler, who lets his own children go with their toes on the ground while he repairs the shoes of others. The nurseryman begins his transplanting operations and his farm work after the planting for his customers has been completed. With many, this work for the season of 1907 was later than ever in starting.

JACKSON & PERKINS Co., Newark, N. Y., is establishing a specimen garden of roses which it is intended shall eventually include all varieties that are sufficiently hardy for outdoor planting in western New York. More than 750 different kinds were set out this spring, and many others will be added next season. In laying out the planting, each class of roses was placed by itself, and under each class the kinds of similar colors are grouped together, so as to facilitate study and comparison. The garden will also be used as a place for carrying on hybridizations with a view

NURSEYMEN CONVENE.

DETROIT, June 12.—The American Association of Nurserymen came together at 10 o'clock this morning at the Hotel Cadillac, for its thirty-second annual convention. When President Orlando Harrison, of Berlin, Md., rapped for order he faced a large body of members, and one that indicates that before the end of the meeting the anticipations of the largest attendance in the history of the association will be fully realized, in spite of the fact that the season is so backward that nurserymen are far busier than usual. There promises to be a larger trade exhibition than usual when all is in place.

After the usual formalities of greeting the reports of officers and standing committees occupied the balance of the morning session. The afternoon session was devoted to five-minute talks on trade topics and to meetings of the Protective Associations. The evening was open for an illustrated lecture, "The Nurseries of the United States," by Prof. John Craig, of Cornell.

EVERGREENS.

Taxus baccata, var. repandens, spreading English yew, is not very often seen growing in nurseries and it is seldom seen on private estates. It is a dwarf-growing, spreading shrub, like yew, peculiar in habit, but useful and effective for some purposes. Occasionally an evergreen is desired for planting in the grass near the edge of a drive, where anything that grows tall would spoil a vista. This yew answers this purpose admirably. I recently observed a dozen specimens, averaging seven feet through, on a private place, planted about ten feet apart along a roadway for the purpose indicated above. This yew is also well adapted for planting in rockeries and on sloping surfaces where evergreens of a different habit would be out of place.

Retinospora squarrosa is a dwarf variety of pleasing habit. It is one of the most desirable evergreens for edging and for planting in masses in places where only dwarf specimens will suit. Retinospora squarrosa Veitchii much resembles the former in foliage, but is more erect in habit and forms more of a tree than the other. It is also in one respect, at least, ahead of squarrosa, and that is, that it is not so liable to be winter-killed.

Retinospora plumosa is naturally one of the best of the *retinopora*s for formal planting. It stands clipping well; in form it is conical; the foliage is light and feathery.

Retinospora plumosa aurea, the golden retinospora, is in form much like the former, but with its beautiful golden foliage it is much more decorative. It stands shearing just as well as the other.

of selecting and lifting for shipment invariably dig up every other one in the rows, leaving the others for another year, when they will attain considerable size. This thinning process acts on the remaining plants much the same as the process of transplanting would, and it is also a good plan, if transplanting has to be done of rows from which none have been dug to fill orders, just to move every other one and leave the others. If arbor vites have been partially spoiled during the winter, all the dead or withered material should be cut out and then it may be they will in time become salable specimens again.

THE SOUTH DAKOTA LAW.

The South Dakota legislature has passed a nursery inspection law to go into effect July 1, that is regarded as rather severe. The law provides that any person, firm or corporation which sells nursery stock in South Dakota, or sends nursery stock into South Dakota, either directly or indirectly, must first secure a permit from the board of agriculture, giving authority to do business in the state. Such permit is only granted upon the condition that the firm asking the same can show a certificate of inspection from a competent entomologist authorized as inspector.

Further, a bond in the sum of $5,000, running to the state of South Dakota, must be given, by which any person who sustains damages may recover. Agents of South Dakota firms, or firms in other states, are obliged to show a letter of authority from their houses, and any agent selling stock grown in any other state than South Dakota is required to procure and carry a duplicate of the permit issued to his principal.

Severe penalties are imposed for misrepresenting nursery stock, or for selling seeds which are adulterated or worthless. The sum of $10 has to be paid to the board of agriculture annu-

MOVING MAPLES.

Can I transplant a maple tree that is fourteen feet high? J. T.

It is now rather late to move maples, these being in full leaf. Better wait until the early part of November for this work. A 14-foot tree will move readily, if care is taken to secure as many roots intact as possible and to plant very firmly. C. W.

DENVER.

The Market.

The last two weeks were busy ones for the florists of Denver, as anything that looked like a flower was entirely sold out on Decoration day and there was nowhere near enough to supply the demand for that day. The weather had a good deal to do with this, as outdoor stock was not available. All the supply since then has been needed for this month of weddings and school closings.

Beauties are coming on in fine shape, perhaps better than any other rose, and the quality is good. Bride and Maid are about enough to supply the demand, but in some cases are small in flower. Richmond perhaps stood the heavy cut of Decoration day the best and is coming on in fine shape. Carnations have shortened up considerably, with quality not as good as usual, and sweet peas, marguerites, mignonette and pansies all find ready sale. Violets are still with us, and while they are small, the color is good and they sell well. Green goods are scarce. Hardly any smilax is to be had, while fern leaves are not of good quality.

Various Notes.

J. A. Valentine and N. A. Benson availed themselves of the chance to get a few fish on the opening of the season, June 1. They returned last week, but reported the river high and muddy.

One of the largest funerals in Denver in some time was that of W. S. Cheeseman, one of Denver's pioneer residents, prominent in all things, and president of the Denver Union Water Co. Some of the finest floral designs were used; for instance, a violet blanket with over 8,000 violets, besides 500 long-stemmed American Beauties, furnished by the Park Floral Co.

Two events of the coming week which will call for a large number of flowers are Derby day and the University Club ball.

The Park Floral Co. is putting up another range of up-to-date houses, being three connected houses of King construction, with gutters nine feet high, making a rose house 55x150. E. S. K.

WAYNE JUNCTION, PA.—Paul Huebner, florist for the Reading railroad, grew 125,000 bedding plants at the company's houses here and now has nearly all of them planted out on the station grounds. He began planting tender stock May 8 and had to replace some of it.

WASHINGTON, PA.—J. F. Poagm, who bought the retail business of the Washington Floral Co. in February, 1906, has turned the store back to them, together with his book accounts, in settlement of a claim for cut flowers supplied to him. The Washington Floral Co. will run the store only long enough to find a customer for it. The business opportunities there are good.

MONTREAL.

The Market.

Summer has arrived and we have been grumbling because of a dry spell lasting a couple of weeks, but the weather man has sent some good showers during the last couple of days, to our great joy.

Outdoor stock is looking fine, though everything is about two weeks late. Valley, narcissi, tulips and daffodils are now on the market, and the lilacs will be ready very soon.

Club Meeting.

The Gardeners' and Florists' Club held its meeting June 3. We were agreeably surprised to see such a large attendance, as we are all busy with gardens, etc., at present and do not often feel inclined to turn out after dark. Mr. Trussell gave an interesting lecture on flowering shrubs, of which he had a few specimens with him. We also decided to hold our annual picnic on July 16, at Highgate Springs.

Various Notes.

The florists are all busy with wedding decorations. This is the month for them and looks as if it is going to be a record breaker. In addition there has been a number of large funerals, including Mr. Burland's, Mr. Bown's, and Mr. Paterson's.

The visit of Prince Fushimi, of Japan, to Montreal kept us all busy with decorations for dinners, luncheons and receptions. Miss Campbell had the order to decorate the car to take the prince to Ottawa. Sweet peas, mignonette, daffodils and Richmond roses were used.

Miss Murray also had a lot of decorations for the prince. One of her orders called for hundreds of American Beauty roses.

P. McKenna & Son's second store will soon be ready for business. Their window was nicely fixed up last week with yellow poppies and asparagus.

Hall & Robinson have had wedding decorations every day this week, besides numerous funeral pieces. Their hydrangeas are very good at present.

J. Bennett has just finished planting out about 10,000 carnations and has more yet.

Mr. Gray, of the Wright Floral Co., has altered the interior of his store to allow more space for work.

TOMMY.

RED HOOK, N. Y.—Warren F. Feller has sold his greenhouses here and has removed to Rhinebeck, in the same county, where he will continue in business as a violet grower.

SAVANNAH, GA.—The firm name of George Wagner's Sons Co. has been changed to the Savannah Floral Co. The management has not changed, however, and W. D. Jones, of the Jones Pharmacy, will continue to look out for the affairs of the concern at the old headquarters, 234 Bull street.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Now that the plant season is about over, we find most of the plantsmen pretty well satisfied. Most of them have cleaned up on all kinds of good stock and were trying to buy, paying $10 per hundred for geraniums without any show of bloom. There is no doubt it was an awful rush at the last, but you can always get more money in a rush, so you would not hear much complaint.

Among the cut flower men business is good along all lines. Prices are, as a rule, reasonable, and almost everything cleans up at some price. There are no peonies to amount to anything; in fact, the outside flowers do not amount to much up to this time. The trade is still talking about Decoration day, and almost everyone claims to have done more than twice the amount of any other year.

Various Notes.

Just before Decoration day J. W. Glenn, of Kittanning, came to the city. Now, Mr. Glenn is the tallest man in the business, standing about six feet six inches. Some practical joker in his own town started the story that he got tangled in the trolley wires and was killed. The story had not traveled far when it assumed the shape of an actual fact, that he had been killed by an electric car. This story reached Mrs. Glenn, who has not been well for some time, being troubled with an affection of the heart. Mrs. Glenn, however, had someone telephone the city and located Mr. Glenn, who on his arrival home was able to read his own obituary in his local paper. Mrs. Glenn, outside of a shock, is no worse, but the joker should be punished.

The club met June 4, but everyone was busy and the smallest meeting in years was the result, only about twelve members being present.

Mrs. E. Leizmann and daughter, of Latrobe, Pa., were visitors.

Walter Garbett has purchased L. I. Neff's Braddock street store, of which he has been manager for some years.

Hoo-Hoo.

CHAMPAIGN, ILL.—J. E. Yeats has leased his greenhouses to Gus Johnson, who will conduct the business in the future.

Current Comment.

June weddings and the closing exercises at the various schools keep the store men busy and have made business good for the past week. The weather, though an improvement over last week, is still very cool and anything but good for the bedding plants.

Through a misunderstanding last week A. Wiegand & Sons were given credit for the decorations at the home of Vice-President Fairbanks, in place of the Bertermann Bros. Co., which furnished the flowers.

R. R. Fohl, who was with the Indianapolis Flower & Plant Co. for a number of years, has taken charge of the greenhouses at the cemetery at Lebanon, Ind.

The last meeting of the State Florists' Society was held at Smith & Young's greenhouse, Stanton avenue. Those present had an enjoyable time. The annual picnic will be held June 26, at Willowmere, on invitation of R. F. Harritt's mother. It is hoped that there will be a good crowd out and that fine weather will prevail.

Clarence Green, lately with Wiegand & Sons, is now in charge of the office at E. A. Nelson's.

S.

RIDGEWAY, PA.—H. W. Girton established a stand on the avenue near the cemetery and did a fine business in plants May 29 and 30.

PADUCAH, KY.—C. L. Brunson has planted flower beds about the Elks' home that would please the most critical of the many florists who wear antlers.

The Electric Circulator

Leominster, Mass., Apr. 5, 1907.

MR. W. W. CASTLE,

Dear Sir:—The Boiler and Circulator installed by you last Fall has given entire satisfaction. I have saved at least twelve tons of coal, and have given Mr. Congdon an order this day for one of the largest Boilers you make to be put in at the Stone property on Nelson St., Leominster. It is the best Boiler I ever had.

Yours respectfully,
(Signed) J. FULLER.

Our New Steel Plate Boiler, built especially for greenhouse heating, is the best and most economical on the market. We do piping and fitting according to most approved methods and guarantee satisfaction.

Greenhouse Heating.

SUPERLATIVE OF SUPERIOR.

There is no grower in the big producing territory north of Chicago who does not know Peter Weiler, of the Superior Machine and Boiler Works, who makes the Superior boiler. To these it will be no news that Mr. Weiler has been at work for a long time on a new boiler for greenhouse use. He has talked about it with so many growers that the boiler represents not only his own long years of experience in building greenhouse heaters, but the experience of many growers who have used a great variety of heating apparatus. The new boiler is internally fired, shipped on skids, needs no brick work and is all ready to move into position, couple up and begin to fire. Mr. Weiler says that in his experience many a good boiler failed to give satisfaction because of some fault in its setting, and this he has aimed to overcome by doing away with any necessity for setting. He says that another thing which has impressed him as being especially objectionable in boilers is the necessity of crawling into or under many of them to clean them; you can clean his new boiler without even letting the fire out. He often has found, he says, that a grower wants to change from hot water to steam (although he often changes back again) and he has provided for this by making his boiler so that it can be used for steam by simply adding a drum. As weight makes cost in every feature of a boiler, from cost of material to freight charges and drayage, he has sought lightness. The boiler at present is made in ten sizes.

MIND THE DETAILS.

Those who are familiar with the problems of heating greenhouses state that they find far too little attention paid to the small details of proper arrangement. It makes all the difference in the world whether or not things are just as they should be. It makes the difference as between having plenty of heat, or just sufficient to save the crop; it makes the difference of a big coal bill, or a moderate one; it makes the difference of requiring constant attention, or only a little.

In a recent conversation the maker of a boiler not often used by florists related an experience with a greenhouse

BUILDERS BUY BOILERS.

As an evidence of the increase in greenhouse glass this season, Kroeschell Bros. Co., Chicago, points out that the company had to June 8 already this season sold fifty-eight greenhouse boilers. They say that the constantly increasing average size of the greenhouse establishments is shown by the fact that calls each year are for larger sizes of heaters. Because of this they were this year impelled to make a new size of boiler,

The hail storm in San Antonio, which was mentioned in last week's REVIEW, and which occurred between the hours of 1 and 2 p. m., Friday, May 31, was one of the most terrific hail storms in the history of the city. The hail stones averaged about four ounces in weight and some were found that were over eight ounces. The greatest damage was done on Laurel Heights, Tobin Hill and Government Hill.

BUFFALO.

The Market.

According to the weather prophet at Buffalo, we were to get summer about July 1, but since June 8 the weather has been ideal. Everything is coming on with a rush and in a few days we will be in the midst of the busiest season of the year. Planting, weddings, graduates and funerals all come in this month and last longer than the rushes we have at holidays. While flowers are not quite so high at this season of the year, it is pleasant to do business, for you have the stock and all wrapping and tying are eliminated.

Stock conditions are remaining about the same, with plenty of everything to go around, except, perhaps, for a spell last week, when through sickness and accident a number of prominent members of Buffalo's 400 passed away. Harry Hamlin was killed in an automobile accident, and such an occurrence always calls for many flowers. F. H. Goodyear, a man worth eighteen millions, died suddenly and the call for flowers caused a sudden shortage. The latter person showed his appreciation for his gardener's work and left him $1,000. No doubt this sudden acquisition of wealth will induce Charlie into the florists' business, but he seems to be a pretty shrewd fellow, so he will probably put his money into some legitimate business. Let us hope so.

Various Notes.

George W. McClure, Buffalo's leading landscape gardener, lost his eldest daughter a few days ago, by pneumonia.

Michael Bloy, the pilgrim, has left the Gasser Co., of Cleveland, and is now located in Buffalo.

Extensive work is being done by the park system in arranging the flower beds about the city. Mr. Donaldson, successor of the late James Braik, is doing finely and bids fair to keep up the splendid reputation that has gone before him. Many thousands of bedding plants are used this spring.

Various Notes.

The usual dullness at this time of the year prevails in the florists' business, and outside of June weddings and some funeral work the sale of flowers and plants at the market or at home is rather slow. Everybody is busy planting chrysanthemums. Early-planted plants may not make the best flowers, but by delaying too long we have much trouble in striking our cuttings with such a warm temperature.

Memorial day in honor of the Confederate soldiers was celebrated a few days ago. Many flowers and decorations were brought to the cemeteries, giving work to some florists, J. H. Menard having, as usual, the largest share of the work.

J. St. Mard has disposed of his entire stock of Washingtonia filifera. This palm is the one which gives the best satisfaction for planting on the avenues. The demand for this kind will be large for a long time; home growers must bear this in mind.

Charles Eble is busy propagating a new fern, a sport from Anna Foster. This new fern originated at his place some time ago and gives the best promise of being a good acquisition. It has a very delicate texture, certainly superior to Whitmani, and will no doubt, when propagated in the north under a milder climate, be found still better.

Charles Eble contemplates moving soon to his new quarters opposite his present place, having purchased five lots of ground, on which he will erect an up-to-date floral establishment. The location is almost on St. Charles avenue, in one of the best sections of the city. This, in connection with his stores on Baronne street, near Canal, which are being now reconstructed, will give him the best opportunity for success.

GREENHOUSE

THE CARNATION HOUSE.

Local Conditions Important.

The construction of any greenhouse, whether for carnations or for any other kind of stock, depends on the conditions existing at the place where the house is to be erected. The ground site may be level, or it may be on a hillside; the climate may be warm, or it may be cold; heavy snow-falls may be frequent, or it is possible that only a fall of one or two inches is experienced once or twice a year; you may have frequent wind storms or you may not—all of these things and many others have a direct bearing on the construction of each and every greenhouse that is built. So important are these influences that it is necessary oftentimes to have two or three types of houses for one kind of stock in a single commercial range.

For this reason it is not possible for anybody to design any one greenhouse and call it a model type, as there can be no one style of construction perfectly suited to all conditions, whether the house is to be used for cut flowers or for any other class of stock generally grown in a commercial range. The fact that so many good growers build different styles of houses for the same crops is conclusive evidence that this is true, and yet it is possible in most cases to follow certain types of houses, as the conditions of climate and ground site do not vary extensively as between most of the commercial ranges of important size throughout that part of the country situated north of the Mason and Dixon line.

The Eccentric Style of Construction.

Then, again, we find a few florists who seem to think that no type of house in use is suited to their purposes and each of these thinks that, in order to get ahead of his competitor, he must have something special and out of the ordinary. These men generally build houses that are in no way suited to the class of stock they intend to grow and afterwards blame the weather, or something else, for the poor quality of stock they produce. It is a fact that many of the growers favor freak houses and have odd ideas on construction, believing that this or that feature will help them to control the temperature better or give more ventilation, which benefits, however, are rarely realized.

This experimenting with construction among the growers serves a valuable purpose, however, for it gives the conservative grower a chance to see the fault of this or that feature or of this and that house, and puts him in position to build a house that is safe and sane, although of course it acts as an incentive for some extraordinary man to produce still another odd structure and call it a model.

It is the object of this modest article on the carnation house to improve these conditions and help every florist to use good common sense in building, as far as the superstructure of the greenhouse is concerned.

The Question of Cost.

Probably no one thing has as much to do with the building of a greenhouse as the cost of it. Everyone wishes to build for the least possible amount of money consistent with first-class material, and rightly so, too, but too often valuable features are omitted on account of a few dollars extra expense. If these few dollars were invested it would mean a saving on repairs, a difference in the quality and amount of stock, also the saving of many dollars' worth of trouble and worry. It is always advisable to get the most for your money, and be sure that you get all that you pay for, but to save a few dollars do not buy a greenhouse that will never be any good, from the time you start with it until you are obliged to tear it down and rebuild.

Material and Workmanship.

One of the first things a florist should look after when building a greenhouse, after he has decided on the construction of it, is the quality of lumber to be used. It is a necessary requisite to a good greenhouse that you have the right kind of cypress, open air dried for two years and then inspected before it is manufactured, by an expert who knows all about cypress defects. Few florists and not many local planing mill men are familiar enough with cypress lumber to know good cypress from poor when they see it. This is of the utmost importance, and you should by all means get your cypress from some manufacturer you have confidence in and who you know will give you the proper stock. A little care in buying cypress will save you many dollars in repair bills every time.

The next essential of the perfect house is the workmanship on the material, which must be first-class in every way, or you will have many hours of worry or a deal of trouble in putting up the house, to say nothing of the extra paint you will need for the rough pieces and the poor fit all the way through. When putting up the house, however, if these three things are made sure of, i. e., proper construction, the right kind of cypress, and honest workmanship, you can depend on growing first-class stock, or it is not the fault of the greenhouse.

Of course there are many minor details to be looked after, such as pattern of gutter, size of sashbars, size of glass, kind of putty, paint, nails, etc., but these will all be taken care of by the construction firm you buy of, if they know their business. It is good policy to let the manufacturer advise you regarding details.

Plan for Range.

To grow carnations successfully and produce a class of stock that will net the grower a sufficient profit, it is necessary to have your houses properly built and properly arranged. In one of the accompanying illustrations an outline ground plan of a carnation range is given, the dotted lines showing additions from time to time and the solid lines showing the first house and boiler-shed. Almost everyone is agreed that long houses are much better than short ones and that wide houses are more economical to heat and to ventilate than the narrow ones; therefore the sketch shows the first house 500 feet long, but if the amount you want to invest is not sufficient to build a house of this size, you can reduce the length so that the cost of material will come within the sum you wish to spend.

The boiler-house in the commercial range should be erected on the north side and all the houses are then built to the south, connecting each house to the other; thus forming what is known as a range of connected houses. We will assume that you are going to build an up-to-date range and that you will build the first house 500 feet long. In that case the boiler-house should be built large enough to heat three times the amount of glass in the first house, so that when you make the new additions marked No. 2 and No. 3, in the ground plan, it will not be necessary to make any addition to the boiler shed. The heating pipes from the boiler-shed should be led into the greenhouse at the end and then distributed throughout the house, so as to give you the desired temperature, making arrangement at the end next to the boiler-house so that you can connect piping for the future addition marked No. 2. It is also important that you have the piping so arranged that your mains will be large enough to carry houses No. 3 and No. 4 when you get ready to build them. Between houses No. 1 and No. 2 and No. 3 and No. 4, I would advise a cross walk five feet wide running from the boiler-shed to the south wall of the last house. You could also arrange for other cross walks in the houses and have entrances in the side at any place convenient. This much for the ground plan and arrangement of houses, but let me say here that this range should be heated by steam and you should use the vacuum system, or some other system that is equally good.

To grow carnations successfully and produce a class of stock that will net the grower a sufficient profit, it is necessary to have your houses properly built and properly arranged. In one of the accompanying illustrations an outline ground plan of a carnation range is given, the dotted lines showing additions from time to time and the solid lines showing the first house and border-shed. Almost everyone is agreed that long houses are much better than short ones and that wide houses are more economical to heat and to ventilate than the narrow ones; therefore the sketch shows the first house 500 feet long. But if the amount you want to invest is not sufficient to build a house of this size, you can reduce the length so that the cost of material will come within the sum you wish to spend.

Width of House.

Much has been said about the proper width for carnation houses and florists, together with construction firms, have gone to both extremes in the matter. One large range built lately consisted of houses ten feet wide, while another grower of prominence erected one 150 feet wide. Certainly there must be a difference between a house ten feet wide and one 150 feet wide and I am of the opinion that one is too narrow and the other is too wide.

After many years of close attention to this one point and after long experience in designing greenhouses, we have proven every claim that we make for it. The style of construction shown in this elevation for a carnation house is also coming into general use, not only in the west but in the east and south.

In building a carnation house this width, twenty-seven feet from center to center of posts, you get the maximum amount of bench room, the best bench arrangement, a greater amount of light, construction that is up-to-date and at the same time reasonable in cost (there being several features that reduce the cost of construction), together with excellent ventilation and economical heating.

Advantages in Twenty-seven Feet.

The benching is ideal for growing purposes, as there are four walks and four benches in such a house, each walk being about twenty inches wide and each bench five feet wide, making a total of twenty feet of bench room to every house. This bench arrangement can only be effected in connected houses, as the north bench in each house sits directly against the posts in the dividing wall. The walls being built with pipe posts set in concrete (using post blocking and blocking clamps to attach sheathing), together with the side sash, and bars on the roof being spaced for 16-inch glass, makes the house light in every nook and corner. The gutters should be twelve inches wide over all and the amount of shade they would cast would not affect either the quality or the quantity of stock produced.

The size of glass to be used should be either 16-inch or 18-inch. Notwithstanding that spacing sashbars twenty-four inches apart has been recommended as advisable, I would suggest that eighteen inches between the bars be the limit. You get plenty of light and the breakage is not as great, for the quality of glass generally used is not strong enough to withstand hail storms and snow pressure if laid twenty-four inches between the bars.

house slightly uneven span, using bars fourteen and sixteen feet, with the shorter bar to the south, that you get more and better light than with a house that is strictly even span. The sashbars being of this length reduces the cost of construction, for if the house were made even-span you would require two 16-foot bars to make a house twenty-seven feet wide—this means a saving of two feet on each of half the total number of sashbars.

The ventilation is a matter of great importance in a carnation house and you should have it arranged so that you can easily and quickly control the temperature at any time. The outside wall should have movable sash, as shown in the illustration, and these should be continuous the entire length of the house, except at the point on the north wall where your boiler-shed overlaps the greenhouse. The roof ventilators should be continuous on both sides of the ridge, and two separate lifting devices should be used, so that either one or both sides can be operated as desired. This arrangement of ventilators will enable you to keep the desired temperature all the time and, while it is somewhat expensive, I believe that the difference in cost is more than made up by the results you get with your stock.

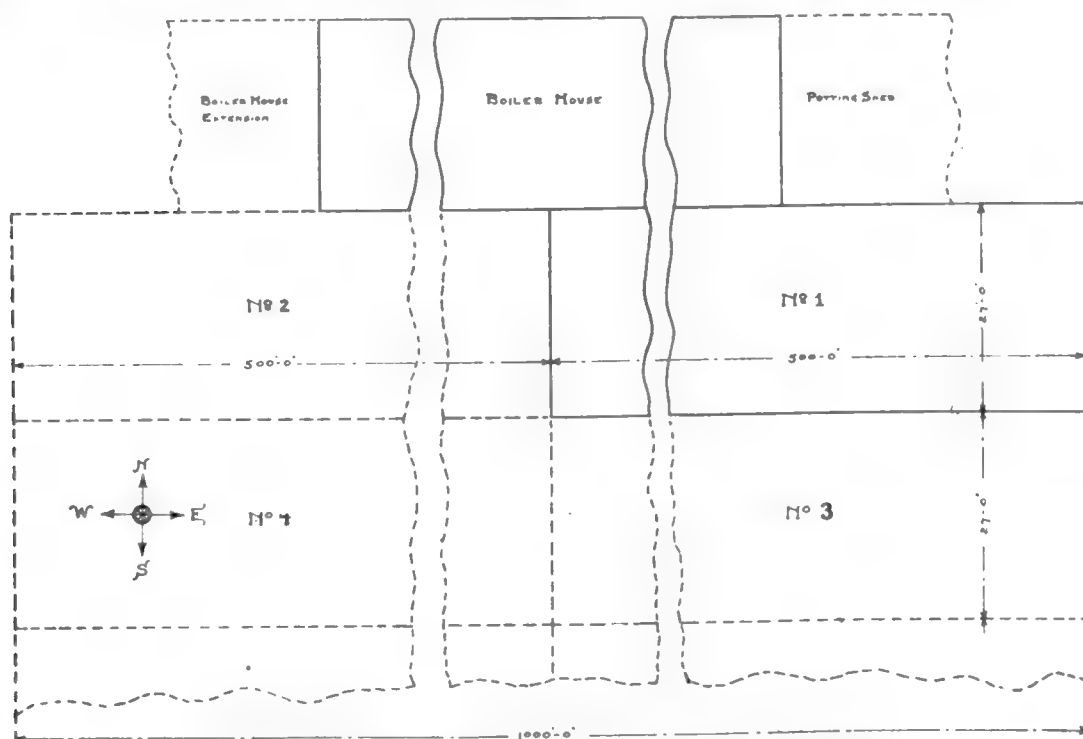

The walls should be seven feet high, which, with a height of six feet nine inches from the gutter sills to the ridge, gives you a total height of thirteen feet nine inches from the grade line to the ridge. With this height you have a large volume of air in the greenhouse, which though not as large as in some of the wider houses, is plenty large enough, for after it is once heated you will have no trouble in keeping it that way or keeping an even temperature throughout the house.

In speaking of wide houses, some of the growers have overlooked the fact that the length has much to do with the volume of air in a greenhouse and the control of temperature; in fact, it has more to do with it than the width. The air in a greenhouse fifty feet wide and fifty feet long is very easily cooled and is subject to quick changes, just as much or more so than a house fourteen feet wide and 200 feet long. If you build your houses 500 feet long and twenty-seven feet wide, the temperature will at no time vary over 5 degrees, and then only at the extreme ends, while in very wide houses that are only 100 or 200 feet long the temperature will at times vary much more, so you can see that wideness has little to do with the volume of air and the changes in temperature if you haven't a long house.

Summary.

In summing up as to the best carnation house, I would suggest a plant as follows: Width of house, twenty-seven feet; length of first house, 500 feet, or as near that length as you can afford to put up, with boiler-room located on the north and situated as shown on the ground plan. Steam heat, vacuum system, continuous movable sash in outside walls and continuous ventilation for the roof, hinged at the header and placed on both sides of the ridge. Use 16x18 inch glass, laid either way. Pipe post walls, with gutter on each wall, and have four 5-foot benches and four walks. Two lines of supports and sashbars fourteen and sixteen feet long, with the shorter bar on the south slope.

I believe that a house or range built

come to the belief that a house twenty-seven feet wide from center to center of posts, as shown in the larger illustration, is the ideal width for carnations or roses. This particular width of house is being adopted by most of the growers throughout the west, both large and small, and it has in each case

For this width of house only two lines of purlins are required, and with the wire truss your house is properly braced, making it strictly up-to-date in construction.

Slope and Ventilation.

It has also been found in making the

along these lines will produce as good carnations as any house that can be built. Houses of this type can be built on ground that has a little slope, but I would suggest that you build on a level site. If possible select a light, sandy soil on which to erect your range.

While this plan is, in my opinion, the best, some changes can be made as to patterns and size of the various parts that enter into the construction. As stated at the beginning of this article, there is no one house that can be taken as a model, but you will find that houses of this type will produce the kind of stock that sells and puts the balance on the right side of the ledger.

BUDDLEIA VARIABILIS.

Last summer several growers exhibited vases of flowers of Buddleia variabilis at various shows. It was much admired by all who saw it then for the first time. This, along with the descriptions given of it in nurserymen's and seedmen's catalogues, caused quite a demand for plants this spring—a demand the supply was not able to meet, at least in some sections. Farquhar & Co., of Boston, received an order by telegram about a week ago from a party who had just read a description of the plant as given in that firm's catalogue. The firm had to wire back that they were sold out of it. It can then be inferred that it will pay to propagate it rapidly.

This buddleia is a recent introduction from China. It is a profuse bloomer. The flowers are lilac in color and are borne in dense panicles from five to six inches long. D. M.

NOTES FROM ENGLAND.

The exhibits at the meeting of the Royal Horticultural Society, London, April 30 were particularly rich in new plants of interest to the trade in general, but, as usual, the majority were orchids. The most noteworthy of these was Odonoglossum Prince Edward of Wales, a hybrid between O. Rolfeae and O. crispum Harryanum. The flowers are white, pure in color, and decidedly and distinctly marked with a good shade of purple. The medium size, good shape, color and strong growth of the plant will make it a useful commercial variety for cutting. The variety originates with Sander & Son, of St. Albans.

Cuthbush & Sons, of Highgate, London, brought up a magnificent new winter carnation which they have named Jessica, of which we shall probably hear much more in the near future as a market variety. The blooms are of immense size, fully five inches across, and are of excellent shape and substance. The color is pure white, slightly striped with scarlet. The stems can be had extraordinarily long and it is one of the strongest growers. We are now continually getting new varieties, of English origin, of the American or winter flowering carnations, and soon there will be a host of purely English varieties, but it is the opinion of many of our largest growers here that neither from America nor elsewhere has there been any variety to equal Enchantress for money making. It is taking on in England more than any other sort, and growers recognize that, to make the most money, fully two-thirds of their stock must consist of this variety. I was in conversation with a big grower today who tries every new variety as it comes out, and grows 70,000 plants of different sorts in pots, but still his stock contains 50,000 Enchantress, there being no other variety yet to come up to it or even near it in every important commercial quality. The Guernsey variety, Britannia, is possibly the only one at all likely to enjoy the favor bestowed on Enchantress.

At the Royal Horticultural Society meeting Barr & Sons showed the largest known variety of trumpet daffodil, the trumpet at the mouth spreading to a width of nearly three inches, the length of the trumpet and the size of the perianth being in proportion to the enormous width of the trumpet. It was a true bicolor and is named Seraphim.

Some substantial prizes have been offered by the Dutch Royal Bulb Growers' Society of Haarlem for hyacinths to be grown in pots and to be exhibited at the show of the Royal Horticultural Society held at Vincent square during March, 1908.

At present roses are glutted in all the English markets. The finest possible quality, with longest stems, as good as the best grown in any part of the States, are being almost given away, the supply being fully double the demand. Carnations of finest possible quality are not bringing fifty per cent of the cost of cultivation, and as to narcissi and other bulb stock, many growers are allowing them to rot in the fields. Lily of the valley, second quality, is selling in the streets at the rate of 3 cents per dozen blooms, finest specials making fifty per cent less than cost of production. Of course these low prices are only for a few days, the cause of the glut, no doubt, being the recent sudden hot, growing weather, which brought every bloom out at one time. J. B.

DEMAND FOR GERANIUMS.

Louis Wittbold, secretary of the George Wittbold Co., Chicago, says that each year he sees the futility of trying to propagate geraniums too late in the season. He says that every year, in their own business, and apparently in the establishments of a great many with whom they have business relations, all the early propagated geraniums are in good shape the latter part of May and sell cleanly at good prices. Then there is a period of strong demand and shortage of stock; all the early propagated plants have been cleaned up and the late propagated stock is not in salable condition. During this period excellent prices always can be obtained. A little later late propagated geraniums begin to come into bloom and shortly there is an oversupply. Eventually most of the stock is cleaned up, if at somewhat reduced prices, but there always is a certain proportion of the late plants which cannot be disposed of. It takes a most plausible salesman to sell a geranium not yet in bloom.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

Callas.

The flowering period for callas being now over, the plants must have a period of rest to recuperate them for another season's work. The pots, if laid on their sides in a warm, sunny position, will be all right until they need shaking out and starting again early in the fall. Calla tubers are so inexpensive that it hardly pays to raise one's own stock, but if a quantity of the smaller offsets or bulblets are planted out in rich ground they will increase in size surprisingly and can be potted up early in September, if carefully lifted, so as to keep the roots intact. Well watered and stood for a few days in partial shade, they will grow right ahead and soon fill their pots with roots.

Hardy Roses.

The cool, damp summer has suited hardy roses to a nicety and, while many will be too late for the annual crop of June weddings, it pays to give them a little attention just now. If hellebore was applied to the foliage last month it should have exterminated or at least checked the ravages of the leaf roller. Green aphids will now be appearing in the ends of many of the shoots and if not dislodged will speedily destroy many of the buds. Where a good force of water is at command, syringing is the best method of controlling this pest. Failing this, syringe with whale oil soap, being careful to remove the sediment from the top of the can or barrel and to keep the soap and water well mixed. Otherwise, much of the foliage will be burned.

The rose bug, that worst of all enemies of the queen of flowers, has not yet appeared, but a few hot days may bring him along. Spraying with poison or syringing prove no terrors for him and the tedious method of hand picking must needs be resorted to. Rose bugs are especially fond of white flowers and on this account some growers plant a few Hydrangea paniculata or viburnum around the rose gardens to attract the pests, which will often attack them and spare the roses.

Mulchings of cow manure and copious watering are needed to give the roses the needed food supply. Look out for shoots of Manetti or briar stock now appearing. Rub or cut these clean out or they will soon cripple the roses.

Rambler Roses.

Rambler roses flower later than the hybrid perpetuals, as a rule, and seem to be rather more immune from insect attacks. Any shoots which have broken weakly should be well cut back. Frequently a shoot will appear to break away nicely and, as warmer weather arrives, the shoots will turn sickly yellow in color. The effects of the severe winter have left but little vitality in these shoots. Where roses of this class are trained on posts, piazzas or on pergolas, care should now be taken to see that they are securely tied. The weight of foliage they carry is daily increasing and high winds accompanied by rains will break them badly.

The old, popular variety, Crimson Rambler, is more widely planted than are other sorts. The trouble with it is that the flowers fade out badly and the foliage becomes rather unsightly early in the summer. On the other hand, such varieties as Lady Gay, Dorothy Perkins, Farquhar and other pink forms are fully as hardy as Crimson Rambler and have the advantage of beautiful, showy, green foliage all summer, after the flowers are gone. These pink Rambler roses are being more and more planted every year and afford a pleasant contrast to the rather overplanted Crimson Rambler.

Outdoor Work.

As a good deal of stock will now be in the open ground, it behooves us to pay considerable attention to this department. Thanks to early rains, carnations got a good start and are looking well in the east. Pull out any plants showing signs of stem-rot or other disease and see that the plants are topped as required.

Violets have also enjoyed the cool and damp May and June and have secured a good start. See that they are kept clean of weeds. Runners will not be produced for a while yet.

Bouvardias, solanums, eupatoriums and similar plants may need a little pinching to keep them bushy. Asters, stocks, gladioli and other plants for cutting have made rather slow growth up to date, but should now come along quickly if the ground is kept well cultivated.

Sweet peas promise to be very good. Have courage even now to thin any which came up thickly. It will pay you to do so. If you mulched them with grass or short manure as recommended, they will stand a dry spell much better.

Aquilegias.

Of the many hardy perennial plants which flower in June, none is more exquisitely beautiful than the aquilegia or columbine. If seed has not yet been sown, procure some without delay and sow under sash in light loam and keep well watered. The seedlings should appear in about a fortnight. When the second leaves have appeared, prick them out four inches apart in a disused frame, or, better still, in the field in well pulverized soil, choosing a damp day for the transplanting. Keep them well hoed and weeded and you will have nice little plants by fall, to flower another season.

The commercial value of the columbine for cut flowers is not half appreciated. For bouquet work, or arranged in vases, they are equally good and they last well in water. While they are classed as perennials, it is better to treat them as biennials and sow a good batch of seed each summer. Of the various species in cultivation none is more beautiful than A. cœrulea, the well-known Rocky Mountain columbine, which has violet blue and white flowers. A. chrysantha, bright yellow; A. glandulosa, dark blue with white corolla, and A. Olympica, mauve blue and white corolla, are other good varieties. No florist will make any mistake in sowing liberally of any of the foregoing varieties. Plants and flowers are both good sellers.

Digitalis.

This biennial is deservedly popular. While not seen to any extent in our markets, well-grown spikes sell readily and in large vases make an effective display. Even where there is no special call for the flowers, it is always possible to sell a number of plants each spring, as foxgloves are among the most stately and beautiful of hardy biennials. In some localities it is necessary to plant them under sashes during winter, but in well drained land, with a light coating of leaves or straw, they usually come through safely. Seed sown now will produce big plants by the end of October. Sown even a month later, good flowering size stock may be had. When transplanted they should be allowed ten to twelve inches apart in the rows, as they grow rapidly. On level land, where water may lie, they will not winter and it is much better to lift them and plant thickly in coldframes, transferring to the open ground in April.

In individual beds foxgloves make a beautiful show. They also are splendid used in masses in the herbaceous garden, or in shrubberies. On the edge of woodland in irregular lines, they are also effective. While the natural habitat is in woods in partial shade, they do well in full sunshine, especially in rich, deep soil. The seed is small and should be sown thinly. It will germinate in a few days and requires transplanting before the seedlings crowd each other. Digitalis gloxiniflora, or gloxinia-flowered, and Ivery's spotted, are especially fine strains. D. monstrosa bears one solitary flower of large size. D. purpurea and a white form are good for naturalizing in woods.

Delphiniums.

The hardy larkspurs are alike splendid for either cutting or making an effective display in the garden borders. The present is a good time to sow a batch of seed. Probably quite a few of these may flower before fall, but all will make fine flowering plants for next year. Sow the seed in a frame, shade well, and keep moist. The seedlings will appear within ten days and will be ready to transplant within a month. Allow six to eight inches between the plants and two feet between the rows. They can be planted out where they are to flower during October. D. formosum, dark blue, and D. formosum caelestinum, light blue, are splendid varieties. Grow a mixed packet of hybrids; a wonderful variety of shades may be had.

D. Chinensis (grandiflorum) in shades of blue and white, growing eighteen inches high, is a grand florists' flower for cutting. Sown now most of the plants will bloom before frost and the second year they will yield a grand lot of bloom. For massing effects this is a valuable perennial. There are other delphiniums of value, including D. sulphureum, yellow; Cashmirianum, dark blue; nudicaule, scarlet, and speciosum, bright blue, but those first named are the most valuable commercially.

Brief Reminders.

Lorraine begonias should have a light shade now that the sun is much stronger. Do not allow the plants to become pot-bound.

Cut double and single peonies twenty-four hours before you want to use them and stand in large tubs of cold water in a cool room.

A late sowing of Primula Sinensis made now will give plants in 4-inch or 5-inch pots for Christmas.

Put in a batch of hydrangea cuttings. They will make nice plants for next season.

Look out for black aphid on chrysanthemums; sprinkle with tobacco dust; syringe freely, allowing the plants to dry before nightfall.

Primulas and cyclamens should now be in a frame, where they will grow faster than in the greenhouse.

Get any late bedding completed as quickly as possible. Get benches cleared of plants too poor to sell and stack away empty pots.

Do not sow calceolaria seed before August. It germinates poorly in mid-summer and the seedlings soon die off.

Do not put off repairs to benches and houses, or to the boilers and piping, until frost threatens. Attend to it now.

Plan to attend the S. A. F. convention in Philadelphia. You will find it money well spent.

THE CHRYSANTHEMUM.

Its Past, Present and Future.

The chrysanthemum in its various forms, as grown today, is essentially modern in its varieties and it is a far cry from the first Japanese introductions of R. Fortune, in 1862, to the large-flowered Japanese sorts of today. No flower has proved so responsive to the efforts of the hybridist, and the present day types of Europe and America are far ahead of the kinds grown at this time in Japan, so far as my knowledge of Japanese varieties goes. When we stop to reflect on the progress made in a period of some fifty years with this flower one hesitates to hazard a guess as to what the future has in store.

The history of the chrysanthemum is interesting. A chrysanthemum show was held in Birmingham, England, as far back as 1836, but no record of it is left saving the mere detail of time and place. The organization that was to be the real factor in developing the chrysanthemum was formed in Stoke Newington, England, in 1846, at an old-fashioned hostelry where a company of congenial spirits used to congregate evenings and over their pipes and beer discussed their favorite flower. That little society prospered in its chrysalis state and eventually evolved into the National Chrysanthemum Society, and this society, by its system of historical records, classifications and nomenclature, put the chrysanthemum where it is today.

The first seedling raised in cultivation was flowered in France about 1827, and I have no doubt the raiser was just as proud of his achievement as we would be today to produce a Beatrice May or William Duckham.

The pompon section was produced from a small semi-double variety sent home by Robert Fortune, from China, in 1842. We are indebted to the French raisers for this type, who christened it pompon from the real or fancied resemblance to the tuft or pompon on the French soldiers' hats of that period. The Fortune introductions of 1862 gave the greatest impetus to the cultivation of the chrysanthemum and they were the ancestors of our present large-flowering kinds.

American History.

Glancing hurriedly through the American history of the chrysanthemum we find that the first seedlings were exhibited before the Massachusetts Horticultural Society in 1879 by Dr. H. F. Walcott, so that Boston, in this, as in so many other matters historical, may rightly claim first honors. Peter Henderson previous to this had imported from Japan, in 1863, some fine varieties, one of which at least, Grandiflorum, was grown until very recently. The American Chrysanthemum Society was not organized until 1889, but shows had been held for some time previous to that in the larger eastern cities. Possibly the greatest enthusiast this country ever had is the veteran, John Thorpe. I had a short talk with him in Chicago last fall and I know he is a mine of information on the early struggles to popularize the mum in this country. Another gentleman who, while his name does not figure so much in print, did a great work in the early days, is William Barr, of Orange. He, too, is brimful of early history, and, furthermore, is just as keen today in testing new kinds as he ever was. What wonderful power of fascination does the mum possess that it can hold a man's interest for a lifetime, compelling him, willy nilly, to remain its slave and worshiper?

In the early eighties several Pennsylvania growers came to the front. W. K. Harris and H. Waterer left their imprint on the mum by raising some fine varieties. New Jersey was represented by T. H. Spaulding and the late lamented firm of Pitcher & Manda. It is impossible in a paper of this description to enumerate all of the men who did yeoman service in the past, but at least two others, Fewkes and Hallock, are deserving of special mention.

The Australian Novelties.

Getting down to the present time, we find that the Australian varieties in the last few years have swept our exhibition tables clear of the older varieties, giving us flowers of such splendid size and color, combined with ideal habit, that there would almost seem to be an infusion of new blood into the race.

The English and French seedlings are in too many cases disappointing to us, comparatively few standing the test of our climate, but the failures in the Australian kinds are few. The reason for this is because the Australian climate at flowering time is similar to ours, often running warm and bright, and if a seedling shows a large, full, perfect flower in this condition it will do the same with us.

An English variety may be splendid in its native home and yet be a failure here, showing an enormous eye and only some five or six rows of petals. Some of their finest kinds act in this way here, Lady Conyers, Elsie Fulton and Mrs. F. W. Vallis being good examples. The Australian kinds, on the other hand, show up much better than they do in Europe, many of them, the sunlight here in the early fall serving to bring out the size and breadth of the petal to greater advantage. I am often asked how it is that the Australian types are such strong growers, splendid in both stem and foliage. Perhaps the chief reason is because in Australia they practice an outdoor system of culture entirely in the section from whence we have received the finest varieties.

Natural Culture.

We should never lose sight of the fact that the chrysanthemum is almost a hardy plant and indoor culture is an unnatural condition which in time tends to degenerate the parent stock. The future will possibly see a race of American seedlings equal or superior to what we are now getting from Australia, but they will be raised outside, in the great southwest, where the hand of man has merely to guide nature in an intelligent, systematic crossing; not here in the east, where with glass houses and artificial heat man must not only guide nature but also finish her product for her.

Another reason why the Australian kinds are all good growers lies in the fact that a rigid selection is kept up all the time, from the seedbed to the flowering stage. Any kind that shows an exceptionally tall, or a weak, spindly habit is destroyed before the plant reaches the flowering stage, so that the temptation to keep it, should it prove to be an exceptionally fine flower, is removed. This I am informed is the policy of Mr. Pockett, of the Wells-Pockett firm, and I say today that this firm, if it does not send us another variety, has left a mark on American chrysanthemum culture that will endure for many years to come.

The most popular type of flower at the present day is the Japanese incurved. This combines the largest size with the incurving petals so much sought after by the commercial grower on account of its shipping qualities. The true Chinese type, with its incurving petals, is apparently too small for present day use, and is entirely crowded out of the exhibition table, saving in classes specially reserved for it, and to a considerable extent it is also getting crowded out of the commercial growers' list. This perhaps is in some ways to be regretted, yet it is only one of the cycles of change that have served to keep alive the interest in the mum. Every few years a new type or color appears and revivifies an interest that perhaps was waning and needed just that stimulus.

Popularity Not Waning.

Some good and worthy people every once in a while tell you that the chrysanthemum is getting played out; that it don't sell as it used to in the market; that people are tired of it, and so forth. Let us look at the facts and see if this is so. What do we find from an exhibition standpoint? We find every year an increased number of cities holding mum shows. We note twenty or more local societies, each in a flourishing condition and holding an annual fall show, where ten years ago not one was in existence. No signs of lack of interest there! If you were in my position as a disseminator of new varieties, and knew, as I know, men who buy the plants out of their own pockets, in cases when the employer is not sufficiently interested to do so, in order not to be behind at show time, you would never talk about lack of interest. I have seen several schedules for the coming fall, and in every case the prizes are larger and far more numerous, and I will go on record as saying now that 1907 will be the banner year to date from the viewpoint of exhibitions.

What about it commercially? That can only be conjectured till we can get an idea of the quantities planted in the different sections, but last year was the best year for prices that I have known since I have studied the flower market. Climatic conditions, I will concede, helped somewhat to bring about this condition, but even so, people look for chrysanthemums now more than they once did in the early fall, and I see no reason to feel pessimistic as to the commercial future of the flower.

TROUBLE WITH PALMS.

I put a few of my palms out in a slat house, with a cover of thin sheeting. The leaves look as if they were burnt; they turn yellow and brown and then dry up. The plants have been well watered. Now, what is the trouble and how can I stop it? Shall I cut off the leaves, all but the center, or shall I put the plants back in the greenhouse? J. T.

This question could have been answered more intelligently if the species of palms referred to had been mentioned, but it is evident that the plants have received a severe check in some way. Possibly they have been recently repotted and were not sufficiently established to be put outdoors during this backward season, or else they have been overwatered since repotting.

It would be best to put them back in the greenhouse for a time, keeping them shaded and syringing once or twice on every bright day, and at the same time the soil should be kept moist, but not sodden, until they have a chance to make a fresh start. The dead leaves may as well be cut off, as they cannot help the plants. W. H. TAPLIN.

Gas Too Strong.

Referring to the letter of W. J. A., page 11 of the issue for June 6, he used the same formula we employed when we first experimented with hydrocyanic acid gas, only he seems to have left it in the house all night, and we only left it twenty minutes or so. When we began experimenting with a longer application of the gas, we reduced the strength. Most growers now use the formula, one pint of water, one pint of sulphuric acid, and two and one-half ounces of cyanide potassium, to each 1,500 cubic feet of air, when they leave the gas in the house all night. This has frequently been declared safe by writers in the REVIEW, but it has been our experience that it sometimes burns the foliage. Our druggist says the potassium cyanide always is all right and we try to use the gas when the house is dry and little wind blowing. Why we do not get uniform results we can not tell. H. O.

Protection From Hail.

On June 14 this part of Missouri—in the vicinity of Joplin—was swept by a fierce hail storm. H. A. Hall's greenhouses were damaged to the extent of $2,500. The place at which I am foreman, the Poundstone Greenhouse, suffered a loss of about $100. Edward Teas and B. F. Crumm got off luckily, with little or no damage. The occurrence put a novel idea in my head. As hail insurance is expensive, we are going to cover our greenhouses with woven wire, commonly called chicken wire. I think that by dipping the wire in paint before fastening, we can make it last about five years. Of course we have to remove the wire in the fall of the year. What do you think about it?

I have worked in France, Germany and Italy, but never before found a journal so full of practical wisdom as the REVIEW. ARTHUR DE LORME.

There is no flower store, no matter what the character of its community, but what can do its share toward increasing the public appreciation of value in flowers. It always is possible to show a few carnations or roses which are just a little better than the ordinary line of stock handled in a store. Few buyers will fail to see the difference and, as time goes on and their buying powers increase, they will not only take, but insist upon having, the better grades.

THE MISSION OF FLORISTS.

I intend that the name of my place, "The Model Greenhouse," shall mean just what it says. Eight years ago I started with one house, 20x80 feet, in this town of 4,000 inhabitants, while today I have over 9,000 feet of glass and will build more this fall. I raise nothing but specimen plants, and by so doing I have created such a demand for fine plants that prices are no longer in the way, even with people of limited means. But the undeniable fact remains that many in our trade insist on numbers, boasting of their ability to grow 5,000 plants in a 2,000-plant house, but never say a word of the trash they have left and throw away at the end of each season. Such florists are no credit to our noble profession; they lower or destroy the trade in their respective localities.

In my opinion, the intelligent florist stands as high in the scale of art as does the composer, author, inventor or scientist. The intelligent florist is a person who does more to refine the taste of the people generally than do those engaged in any other known art or profession. And why? Because the fundamental principles of floriculture rest upon nature itself; there can be no imitation, without immediate detection; it is the oldest and most noble of the arts, and doubtless the one most envied by those who have not been endowed by nature with that fine sense that understands the nature of plants, and by a single glance is able to diagnose their various ailments. To demonstrate the truth of my statement, it is only necessary to visit some isolated spot of mountainous backwoods; there you see no cultivated flowers, music, books nor any of the civilizing influences inherent in city life. What is the result? Why, when one of these people visits a town, you can point him out among a thousand.

The savage needs no flowers; no, a pile of leaves to crawl into at night, and a club to defend his worthless life against the denizens of the wilds, is all he needs. He has no desire to better his condition. Now, suppose that a well trained landscape gardener could in the midst of the savages' nomadic habitations lay out one of those fine parks we find in our large cities; what do you think would be the result? Simply this, as soon as one of these savages would find that park laid out in order he would be so astonished at the strange sight that he would run and impart the fact to the whole tribe and that park would become the center of civilization—the Eden of savages. They would begin to think, wondering how it all came about. But this would not be the end; the most intelligent would begin to imitate parts of it and possibly try to preserve the original, and thus would to some extent become civilized without their knowledge. Having found such a pleasant spot, each

RETAILERS' ADVERTISING.

Reproduced herewith is an advertisement which would be a credit to any retail florist. There is an impression among some of the leading retailers that the ethics are violated by the kind of newspaper advertising done in other lines of business. Whether or not it detracts from the "tone" of an establishment to cater for business outside the select circles, the business which depends only upon the upper class can never grow beyond certain closely defined limits. The business which attains its largest development must draw its patronage from the great middle class. These are the ones who read the newspapers and whose support may be gained through dignified advertising.

Mr. Ludwig, although he conducts, so far as is recorded, the only all night flower store in the United States, does business on a dignified basis, and the dignity of his establishment is well maintained by the advertisement here cited. Its publication in the newspapers of Pittsburgh, Allegheny and surrounding towns has kept his name and facilities before one of the richest flower buying communities in the United States. Of course, he changes the illustration and text of his advertisement from season to season, the June advertisement being especially appropriate to the season of weddings.

'TIS DEARNESS ONLY.

What we obtain too cheap we esteem too lightly; it is dearness only that gives everything its value.

These words, spoken of human liberty, are as true today as they were when, in 1776, Thomas Paine employed them in conjunction with that phrase, "These are the times that try men's souls," which has gone into the electrotype of human speech.

It would be well for every florist to bear constantly in mind that "it is dearness only that gives everything its value." Cheapness is not one of the things for which a florist should make effort. Comment often has been made that a certain flower lost its salability in stores of the better class as soon as it became so cheap that it could be sold upon the streets. But, while every florist should seek to raise the prices of his stock rather than to lower them, it does not follow that he should lose sight of the necessity of doing it by improving its quality. In other words, intrinsic worth must go with increased prices. You cannot educate the people to pay higher prices for poor flowers, but you may easily lead them to an appreciation of the fact that good flowers are better value than cheap ones.

one would try to dig his cave in or near the park and thus convert a land of Nod into a real Paradise.

Now, I would present to all intelligent florists this one appeal: If the savage can, to a great extent, be led by a single person to partial civilization, how much more can we, the intelligent florists of America, the refinement of which we read so much about in our papers and magazines—how much more can we, each one in his respective town, be the leaders of refinement and good taste! We live in an age when people are no longer satisfied to feed their bodily frame through the stomach, as do all lower animals. No, that time is past; they require stimulants for the separate senses—flowers for the eyes, music for the ears, good books for the brain, perfumes for the nostrils, besides other qualities that act in conjunction and have the same stimulating effect on all our senses alike.

I do not ask my brother florists to put on wings or transform themselves into saints, but I would ask them to cease the false idea of quantities independent of quality. Let us rise to that standard of floriculture that will give to our profession the reputation that it deserves and place us in a position in which, before another generation has passed, we may be looked upon as the real pioneers of refinement. Such, in my opinion, is the true mission of all intelligent florists.

worms. In the ground they feed on the roots. They have overrun the two houses of carnations and I have tried almost everything to kill them, but failed. They started last fall to eat the leaves, then quit until this spring, and now are eating the stems. E. F.

The specimen you sent belongs to the rose beetle family and has done serious damage in certain sections to various kinds of plants, and to carnations among them. The larva eats the roots while the beetle eats the growth above the soil, and between them they use up the plants quite badly. They are rather difficult to reach with a view to destroying them, and in fact they are not easily destroyed. You can get rid of many of them by digging for the larvæ whenever you see a plant is being attacked, the same as you do for the grub-worm in your rose beds. These may also be destroyed by the use of bisulphid of carbon, applied to the soil about the roots of the plants. The surest way of destroying the beetles is hand picking. While this seems like a herculean task, yet when you consider that they cannot fly it becomes more simple. Dusting tobacco dust around on the plants and the soil may also be helpful. It may not destroy them, but it may be so distasteful to them as to cause them to leave.

SPRINGVILLE, N. Y.—E. W. Hampton, junior member of the firm of M. L. Hampton & Co., and Miss Lottie Churchill were married June 15 at the home of the bride's parents in Springville. They left on the afternoon train for a few days' stay in Buffalo, after which they will be at home in Springville.

LONG-STEMMED BLOOMS.

The grower who is not now getting good, long stems on his carnations, never can hope to unless he changes his cultural methods, but W. C. Scovell, at Malta, O., thinks his Queen Louise, as shown in the accompanying illustration, will be hard to beat. He says: "They were cut May 20. Take notice of the stiffness of the stems, and length. The one standing by the yard-stick is fastened to it at the bottom to hold it against the figures. It is inserted in the stick one inch. That makes it thirty-four inches high. The shortest stem was twenty-eight inches at the date mentioned. My plants were green to the ground; not fifteen per cent of them otherwise. My method of culture and supporting the stems means fine flowers on long, stiff stems. This has been the best season for me in my business. All winter long my carnations have been unusually fine. We cut 3-inch Lawson and Lady Bountiful on 30-inch stems for Memorial day, and Enchantress that were three inches and over, on stems thirty to thirty-six inches long, almost as straight as those in the picture."

THRIPS ON CARNATIONS.

I am sending you some carnation blossoms, taken from a bed of Glacier. We get few good, salable blooms from them. In the same house there are two narrow benches of other varieties that are all right. We did not get the Glacier staked up in good shape, so they do not stand up well. I thought perhaps that might cause the trouble. I am also sending you a sample of the soil they are in. Is it all right? Is it characteristic of this variety to produce such blooms? It did not do so earlier in the season.

R. M.

The carnation blooms showed plainly the effects of thrips in the brown spots around the edge of the petals. I could not find any of the insects, because the soil had shaken all through the blooms, which made it impossible to distinguish a small insect. However, the signs were unmistakable. If warm weather has set in, it is almost impossible to successfully combat this pest, it breeds so fast. The time for that is in cool weather, and tobacco in any form is the best destroyer. Of course it is more difficult to fight them on plants that are not supported properly, but that alone will not start them. The soil seems fairly good and of course is not at fault.

ROSE BEETLES ON CARNATIONS.

Having read in the REVIEW how to kill different bugs, I should like to know the name of the bug which I enclose herewith. Bugs of this sort have been eating the carnations. They eat all around the bottom of the plant. They collect in groups all over the benches, and the young look like little grub-

ROSES

CARE OF EARLY STOCK.

During the busy season of planting, those houses which were planted early must not be neglected, as they frequently are. Beyond the usual watering, ventilating and syringing, they are frequently left to themselves during the rush. Cultivating should be practiced regularly, especially during the hot weather, in order to keep them growing. Staking and training should also be attended to. Every branch and stem should be trained into place, so that they may not scramble over the bench, allowing plenty of room among the foliage for free circulation of air. If this work is neglected, the eyes are apt to break weak and cause a thicket of blind wood, which makes a shelter for red spider, and under such conditions it is almost impossible to reach them with the syringe.

Beauties which have made some growth in the bench should be gone carefully over and where necessary they should be shortened back to encourage the lower eyes to break.

As spider and black spot usually begin their depredations on the leaves at the base of the stem, it is sometimes good policy, where the plants are strong enough to bear it, to strip off these leaves high enough up so that none of them may touch the soil. Every leaf showing signs of black spot should be picked off and destroyed.

Grafted stock should be supported just as soon as planted, so as to secure the scion against injury by being shaken during syringing, and any grafted stock which has begun to make growth should have a going over weekly to see that the tying material is not cutting into the bark and also to remove the suckers which are certain to show up, and which, if neglected, will rob the scion of its sustenance.

RIBES.

HYBRID PERPETUAL ROSES.

All the extra labor devoted to outdoor roses from the time growth has started perceptibly until the opening of the buds will yield a substantial return in quality and size of blooms.

If the soil in which roses are planted is fairly well drained it is almost impossible to give the plants too much water when growth is vigorous; on the other hand, roses never give satisfactory results when planted in wet, undrained soil.

Hellebore powder is about the safest thing to use on roses outdoors as a preventive of insects, etc., and its use should be frequently resorted to. Only by removing dispensable buds can we reasonably expect to have large, choice flowers. The buds intended to be removed should not be left on the plants after their disposition has been decided upon.

Some mulch roses with manure, leaving the manure on the surface of the soil. That method is not only unsightly in practice, but it is questionable if it answers the purpose for which it is intended as well as if it were covered to the depth of two or three inches with good, clean soil. Roses, like most other plants, like a thorough cultivation

HEELED-IN ROSES.

I have several hundred roses heeled in. Will they be good for next year by planting them in deep, rich soil? How soon would you cut them back, so that they would make a good, strong growth for next year? The roses are Crimson Rambler, Gruss an Teplitz, Ulrich Brunner, Vick's Caprice, Jacqueminot, Clio, White Maman Cochet, Maman Cochet, Kaiserin and Hermosa. All are two-year-old field grown stock and have made long growth with bud, and heeled in at that. Would you at once cut them all back hard, or just a little at a time? I am planting them deep. The soil is twenty-six inches deep, with one-third of rotted cow manure and the balance rich, heavy loam from the field.

J. T.

It is getting late to head back roses such as you name. If, however, you have them heeled in, I would advise cutting them back at once. Prune the Ramblers, Brunners, Clios, Vick's Caprice and Jacqueminots hard, the Cochet's and others a little less severely. Plant deeply, tramp the ground firm, give a soaking of water if the weather is dry and throw a mulching of fine earth over it afterwards. They should succeed well in such soil as you have, but it is unfortunate you left the planting till so late.

NEW IRISH ROSES.

As seasons pass, Alex. Dickson & Sons, who have sent out a number of sorts which have proved of value in America, including Liberty in 1900 and Killarney in 1898, steadily swell the list of their novelties. This year it contains no less than eight sorts. The firm supplies the following descriptions:

Colonel R. S. Williamson (H. T.)—The blooms are large, full, perfectly formed, with high-pointed center; the petals are round, smooth and possessed of great substance; color satiny white, with deep blush center; lovely. The flowers, which are produced in great profusion, are carried upon erect and rigid footstalks. The growth is vigorous and upright, with handsome deep green foliage; altogether a first-rate rose for any purpose.

Dorothy Page Roberts (H. T.)—This is a beautiful and novel variety, of robust and erect growth, and free, with continuous blooming character. It is not sufficiently full for exhibition purposes, but is an ideal decorative or garden rose. The combination of colors is novel, distinct and beautiful, being a lovely shade of coppery pink, suffused with apricot yellow, more especially at the base of the petals, which are large.

Elizabeth Barnes (H. T.)—In this rose we have produced a combination of colors hitherto unknown. Dr. Huey, the eminent American authority on roses, when visiting our nurseries in 1906, expressed the opinion that this was the most beautiful and charming of our introductions, and his ideal of the highest type of rose beauty. The shades of color may be described as satiny salmon rose, with a fawn center, suffused with yellow; outside of petals deep rosy red, shaded with copper and yellow. The flowers are large, full, with pointed center, perfectly formed and possessing a delightful fragrance.

Harry Kirk (H. T.)—Of robust growth, with free branching habit, flowering freely and continuously. The blooms are large, full, with large, smooth petals of great substance; the form is perfect; the buds are long; color deep sulphur yellow, passing to a lighter shade at edges of petals; much the best of its color.

Lady Helen Vincent (H. T.)—A distinct variety, of robust growth and free flowering character. The blooms are large, full and of exquisite form, the buds long and pointed, color shell pink, reflex of petals blush, base of petal veined and suffused peach, with a yellow zone; delightfully fragrant.

Mrs. Harold Brocklebank (H. T.)—The growth is robust, flowering freely and continuously; the blooms, which are produced on erect footstalks, are large, full and of perfect formation and sweetly perfumed; the color is creamy white, center buff, base of petals soft golden yellow, outer petals frequently tinted with salmon rose, buds with a flush of salmon pink.

Souvenir of Stella Gray (Tea)—The flowers are of medium size, full, perfectly formed and most freely produced. The shades of color are hitherto unknown in any rose; the predominating tone is deep orange, with splashes or venations of yellow, apricot, salmon and crimson.

W. E. Lippiatt (H. T.)—This is a most welcome addition, supplying a color much required—brilliant velvety crimson, shaded maroon. The blooms are large, full, symmetrically formed, with high-pointed center and strongly perfumed; growth vigorous.

TO DESTROY RATS.

Rats, as well as other rodents, are sometimes a great pest in greenhouses, and those who have experienced the difficulty of getting rid of them will be interested in a new bulletin of the U. S. Department of Agriculture entitled "Methods of Destroying Rats." The rat has been a resident of the United States since 1775 and the bulletin says it is the worst mammal pest in the land, doing millions of dollars of damage each year. In spite of constant warfare, its numbers are increasing rapidly, for it breeds three or four times a year, producing six to twelve at a litter. Of numerous poisons the following is recommended:

"One of the cheapest and most effective poisons for rats and mice is barium carbonate, or barytes. This mineral has the advantage of being without taste or smell; and, in the small quantities used in poisoning rats and mice, is harmless to larger animals. Its action on rodents is slow, but reasonably sure, and has the further advantage that the animals before dying, if exit be possible, usually leave the premises in search of water. Its employment in houses, therefore, is rarely followed by the annoying odor which attends the use of the more virulent poisons.

"The poison may be fed in the form of a dough made of one-fifth barytes and four-fifths meal, but a more convenient bait is ordinary oatmeal, with about one-eighth of its bulk of barytes, mixed with water into a stiff dough; or the barytes may be spread upon bread and butter or moistened toast. The prepared bait should be placed in rat runs, a small quantity at a place. If a single application of the poison fails to drive all rats from the premises, it should be repeated with a change of bait."

In greenhouses there frequently is much water, and the rats may not leave to die. Then, to prevent odor, trapping is necessary.

"Trapping, if persistently followed, is one of the most effective methods of destroying rats. The improved modern traps with a wire fall released by a baited trigger and driven by a coiled spring have marked advantages over the old forms, and many of them may be used at the same time. These traps, sometimes called guillotine traps, are of many designs, but the more simply constructed are to be preferred. Probably those made entirely of metal are the best, as they are less likely to absorb and retain odors.

"Guillotine traps should be baited with small pieces of Vienna sausage (Wienerwurst) or bacon. The trigger wire should be bent inward, to bring the bait into proper position to permit the fall to strike the rat in the neck."

our climate to give them anything like an equable temperature, something necessary for successful mushroom culture. I have seen the experiment tried and while on one or two occasions a few mushrooms have appeared, no real crop has been secured. If it is decided to experiment outdoors, it will be necessary not only to mulch the beds, but also to protect them with shutters from soaking rains. It will, however, be far better to spawn beds in cellars or sheds where a night temperature of 56 degrees to 60 degrees can be maintained and from which light can be excluded. As the late fall and winter months are those in which mushrooms sell especially well, the earliest bed, if spawned about August 1, should come into bearing about the middle of September. As we usually have killing frosts early in October, such a bed even, with ideal outdoor conditions, would not yield much of a crop unless carefully protected.

In England mushrooms are grown on quite a large scale outdoors, but it must be remembered that their climate is very different from ours, being much more humid and with a generally lower and more even temperature, conditions which mushrooms like.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The outdoor flowers are here and never have we seen finer weigelas, spireas and snowballs. They have been used lavishly in decorations. Wagon-loads of snowballs were used in the church decorations by Wadley & Smythe, put up for the wedding of the daughter of Stuyvesant Fish. The delayed season seems to have been just what these nursery specialties needed to make their bloom perfect.

Beauties at their best still command $15 a hundred. A few even sold higher on Monday, but the tendency is toward a lower level. If the heat continues I will not be surprised to see 10 cents top by Saturday. Bride and Maid will likely go to 3 cents for selected stock and $5 to $10 a thousand for the lower grades.

Carnations are melting fast and $1 per hundred promises to be the top for good stock before the week is over. Even now $2 will purchase the best stock that reaches the market. It is simply the expected that has happened, only the summer break is a month later than usual. Everybody is philosophical about it and no one seems especially surprised or pessimistic.

Lilies are down to $4 and valley to $2 per hundred for the best. Sweet peas and everything else have joined the procession.

Weather and Auctions.

When New York decides to do anything worth while, it does it well. So when the hot weather came, as it did in earnest on Saturday last, it was hotter here by several degrees than anywhere else in the United States. The hot wave continued through Monday and at this writing seems to have come to stay. The welcome it has received demonstrates how unpopular has been the long stretch of unseasonable weather. Even in a day the vegetable and fruit markets show the benefit of the change in increased receipts and more reasonable prices.

The fruit auction market is a most interesting study. The enormous daily receipts of fruit of every kind from the south and distant west are disposed of by auction every morning and the speed, system and thoroughness of the work are a revelation. I am indebted to John P. Cleary for the details of the interesting methods whereby the vast receipts are so safely and completely disposed of. He is making a fine success of this auction business. At Cleary's Horticultural Hall Ambrose Cleary now presides and twice weekly large quantities of bedding plants and nursery stock are sold. Elliott & Sons maintain their extensive distributions by the same method every Tuesday and Friday.

The auction season has broken all records this year in prices and attendance, at times there being lack of even standing-room at the busy marts. Prices often reached above regular retail rates. The ladies were much in evidence at Elliott's. The veteran has a very persuasive voice and at times it is irresistible.

Various Notes.

The travel to Europe and to the summer resorts around New York has begun in earnest. Down at Newport Siebrecht & Son, Leikens, Wadley & Smythe and Hodgson have opened their branch stores and business has begun.

The early closing movement by the wholesalers is receiving general attention and the prospect is a universal agreement for 3 p. m. daily for July and August.

July 2 comes the New York Florists' Club's annual outing. Already the success of the annual festival is assured, with a guarantee account of nearly $1,000 in purchased tickets, advertising patronage and prize donations.

Last week Wednesday the New York Florists' Club's field day did not draw a large attendance. Those who made the trip to beautiful Bronx park were well rewarded. George V. Nash, the superintendent, met the delegation and escorted the members through the conservatories and the grounds, after which the exhibits in the Museum building were inspected. Adam Miller, another of the club's members, was in charge of the Horticultural Society's exhibition. The display was not extensive and the attendance of the general public light. Among the exhibitors were the F. R. Pierson Co., of Tarrytown, N. Y.; Lager & Hurrell, Summit, N. J.; George Hale, Red Bank, N. J.; William McCollom, Islip, L. I.; Julius Heurlin, South Braintree, Mass.; Howard Nichols, Yonkers, N. Y.

The beauty of general window-box effects is now much in evidence on all the principal avenues of New York, scarcely a hotel or club being without them and hundreds of private houses having elaborate decorations in this line. Some are kept thoroughly up-to-date by frequent changes throughout the season.

David Howells, at the Knickerbocker hotel, has produced a fine effect on the hotel's terrace garden and the evergreen decorations by Hiram T. Jones, of Elizabeth, massive and extensive, furnish an object lesson the other big hostelrys are not slow to follow.

Myer, of Madison avenue, has been doing some fine landscape work at Norfolk, Conn.

W. A. Donohoe had the Fiedler wedding this week, house and church, at Little Silver, N. J. Pink peonies and pink and white roses were the predominating flowers. It was one of those "no limit" decorations the retail florist is always glad to land.

June 13, the veteran, C. L. Allen, of Floral Park, L. I., celebrated his seventy-ninth birthday. He is one of the young old men of horticulture, understands true, scientific living and is as spry and ambitious as a man of 40 years. There was a happy family celebration of the event.

Mr. Hicks has retired from the firm of Hicks & Crawbuck, Brooklyn, and on July 1, under the title of Hicks & Co., will open a wholesale cut flower establishment at 52 West Twenty-eighth street, New York. Mr. Henshaw then removing to his new store at 44 West Twenty-eighth street. Mr. Hicks is well known to the trade and a young man of excellent character and reputation. He should win his share in the rapidly developing wholesale business of the metropolis. For good, clean, upright dealing and faithful attention to duty there is always room in every line of floriculture and the old and well established houses go right on adding to the volume of their business every year.

John Hanft, of Hanft Bros., Madison avenue, sailed June 13, with his wife, by the Augusta Victoria for a three months' trip in Europe. Charles B. Hanft will spend the summer at his hotel at Sea Cliff, L. I., as usual. A good many of

A. J. Guttman and family have moved to their Chatham home for the summer. A good many of the wholesalers have the suburban bee in their bonnets and shortly will be locating where the roses and the mosquitoes bloom.

Elliott & Son will close the auction season June 25 with a big sale of florists' stock for growing on. This has been one of the most successful seasons this old house has ever had and the final auction is expected to bring out one of the largest crowds of trade buyers ever gathered in the auction rooms, for many greenhouses are empty, after the big spring season, and stock is needed for a fall crop.

Joseph Fenrich has added a swift pony and cart to his traveling facilities and his growers may expect frequent fraternal visits during the warm season.

John Scott, of Flatbush, has branched out into every variety of bedding stock, palms, etc., in his big plant in Brooklyn, where some 60,000 square feet of glass demonstrate the devotion of ten busy years. The venerable parents of Mr. Scott left last week for a visit to their old home in Scotland. Scottii is as popular as ever. Mr. Scott will have many houses full of it for the fall deliveries.

Louis Schmutz, Sr., of Flatbush has been laid on the shelf lately with rheumatism but with the warm weather will soon be on his feet again. An outing of the New York club without "Louie"

and his family would be like a year without a summer. J. AUSTIN SHAW.

ODONTOGLOSSUM CITROSMUM.

Unlike the majority of odontoglossums, which, owing to our hot summers, are of difficult culture, Odontoglossum citrosmum is a comparatively easy variety to grow. It is a native of Guatemala, from whence it was first introduced into England in 1840. The pseudo-bulbs are of a light green color, smooth and shiny. The foliage is oblong and quite stout. The flowers have fine white sepals and petals, the top being light purple in color, and are produced on pendent racemes of eight to twenty-five flowers, in some cases even more being carried. There is a pure white form, one with a deep rosy lip and another in which the sepals and petals are dotted with purple. The flowers are two and one-half to three inches across, full in outline and have a delicate lemon odor.

While the cool odontoglossums, such as crispum and Pescatorei, succeed best in pots or pans, Odontoglossum citrosmum is best grown in baskets, a cattleya house temperature suiting it. It should at all times be hung well up to the light. During winter it should be placed in a sunny position and kept somewhat drier at the roots to ensure a good crop of racemes. The flowering season is May and June, when such other useful orchids as Lælia purpurata, Cattleya Mossiæ, C. Mendelii and Miltonia vexillaria are in season.

Nash, the superintendent, met the delegation and escorted the members through the conservatories and the grounds, after which the exhibits in the Museum building were inspected. Adam Miller, another of the club's members, was in charge of the Horticultural Society's exhibition. The display was not extensive and the attendance of the general public light. Among the exhibitors were the F. R. Pierson Co., of Tarrytown, N. Y.; Lager & Hurrell, Summit, N. J.; George Hale, Red Bank, N. J.; William McCollom, Islip, L. I.; Julius Heurlin, South Braintree, Mass.; Howard Nichols, Yonkers, N. Y.

The beauty of general window-box effects is now much in evidence on all the principal avenues of New York, scarcely a hotel or club being without them and hundreds of private houses having elaborate decorations in this line. Some are kept thoroughly up-to-date by frequent changes throughout the season.

David Howells, at the Knickerbocker hotel, has produced a fine effect on the hotel's terrace garden and the evergreen decorations by Hiram T. Jones, of Elizabeth, massive and extensive, furnish an object lesson the other big hostelries are not slow to follow.

Myer, of Madison avenue, has been doing some fine landscape work at Norfolk, Conn.

W. A. Donohoe had the Fiedler wedding this week, house and church, at Little Silver, N. J. Pink peonies and pink and white roses were the predominating flowers. It was one of those "no limit" decorations the retail florist is always glad to land.

June 13, the veteran, C. L. Allen, of Floral Park, L. I., celebrated his seventy-ninth birthday. He is one of the young old men of horticulture, understands true, scientific living and is as spry and ambitious as a man of 40 years. There was a happy family celebration of the event.

Mr. Hicks has retired from the firm of Hicks & Crawbuck, Brooklyn, and on July 1, under the title of Hicks & Co., will open a wholesale cut flower establishment at 52 West Twenty-eighth street, New York. Mr. Henshaw then removing to his new store at 44 West Twenty-eighth street. Mr. Hicks is well known to the trade and a young man of excellent character and reputation. He should win his share in the rapidly developing wholesale business of the metropolis. For good, clean, upright dealing and faithful attention to duty there is always room in every line of floriculture and the old and well established houses go right on adding to the volume of their business every year.

John Hanft, of Hanft Bros., Madison avenue, sailed June 13, with his wife, by the Augusta Victoria for a three months' trip in Europe. Charles B. Hanft will spend the summer at his hotel at Sea Cliff, L. I., as usual. A good many of his florist friends spend their holidays at this popular resort.

A. J. Guttman and family have moved to their Chatham home for the summer. A good many of the wholesalers have the suburban bee in their bonnets and shortly will be locating where the roses and the mosquitoes bloom.

Elliott & Son will close the auction season June 25 with a big sale of florists' stock for growing on. This has been one of the most successful seasons this old house has ever had and the final auction is expected to bring out one of the largest crowds of trade buyers ever gathered in the auction rooms, for many greenhouses are empty, after the big spring season, and stock is needed for a fall crop.

Joseph Fenrich has added a swift pony and cart to his traveling facilities and his growers may expect frequent fraternal visits during the warm season.

John Scott, of Flatbush, has branched out into every variety of bedding stock, palms, etc., in his big plant in Brooklyn, where some 60,000 square feet of glass demonstrate the devotion of ten busy years. The venerable parents of Mr. Scott left last week for a visit to their old home in Scotland. Scottii is as popular as ever. Mr. Scott will have many houses full of it for the fall deliveries.

Louis Schmutz, Sr., of Flatbush has been laid on the shelf lately with rheumatism but with the warm weather will soon be on his feet again. An outing of the New York club without "Louie"

and his family would be like a year without a summer. J. AUSTIN SHAW.

ODONTOGLOSSUM CITROSMUM.

Unlike the majority of odontoglossums, which, owing to our hot summers, are of difficult culture, Odontoglossum citrosimum is a comparatively easy variety to grow. It is a native of Guatemala, from whence it was first introduced into England in 1840. The pseudo-bulbs are of a light green color, smooth and shiny. The foliage is oblong and quite stout. The flowers have fine white sepals and petals, the top being light purple in color, and are produced on pendent racemes of eight to twenty-five flowers, in some cases even more being carried. There is a pure white form, one with a deep rosy lip and another in which the sepals and petals are dotted with purple. The flowers are two and one-half to three inches across, full in outline and have a delicate lemon odor.

While the cool odontoglossums, such as crispum and Pescatorei, succeed best in pots or pans, Odontoglossum citrosimum is best grown in baskets, a cattleya house temperature suiting it. It should at all times be hung well up to the light. During winter it should be placed in a sunny position and kept somewhat drier at the roots to ensure a good crop of racemes. The flowering season is May and June, when such other useful orchids as Laelia purpurata, Cattleya Mossiae, C. Mendelii and Miltonia vexillaria are in season.

WHEN you want to see all the current offers of California plant and bulb specialties, look at the Pacific Coast Department of the REVIEW.

ROCHFORD & SONS, Ltd., now has 1,200,000 feet of glass at Broxbourne, England, growing a great variety of plants and cut blooms, so all the horticultural enterprise is not to be found in America.

Special Notice Fourth of July

Because the Glorious Fourth, when every one celebrates, falls on Thursday, the day the Review usually is mailed, that week's edition will go to press one day earlier than usual—on Tuesday instead of Wednesday.

Advertisers and correspondents will please take "Special Notice."

SUMMER at last.

IN some sections there is considerable bedding stock left unsold.

Results bring advertising.
The REVIEW brings results.

WHEN you get an order for a "laurel" wreath make it out of leucothæ.

THE southern ficus growers say that the demand for young stock is steadily ahead of the supply.

WRITE the REVIEW a letter about your way of doing this thing or that, which you consider better than the way it is usually done.

THE old saying that "It is an ill wind that blows nobody good" is well exemplified in the case of this springless year. Winter prices have been realized by cut flower growers to a later date than ever before.

THE government statisticians do not take so pessimistic a view of the wheat crop prospects as have the grain speculators—and another good corn and wheat crop in the west insures a good year for the florists' trade all over the country.

CAMPANULAS are being recognized more and more as desirable pot plants. They are of easy culture, quite out of proportion to the return they give in the way of gorgeous specimens in about twelve months after the seed is sown. The seed of these, as well as that of various kinds of perennials, should soon be put in.

THE Peterson Nursery, Chicago, has a wonderful display of irises this week. The collection is large and includes a great variety of fine sorts. W. A. Peterson says that the iris is a most profitable line for any florist or nurseryman, for it grows in any soil and in any out-of-the-way place, with little attention, affording an excellent percentage of profit on all receipts from it.

THE NATIONAL SHOW.

The Horticultural Advertiser, published in England, says: "We note that efforts are being made to arouse a sentiment in favor of a really national horticultural show in America. We wish the movement every success, as exhibitions of this nature, if not too frequent, so as to become common, have a most stimulating effect, and must in the long run be a benefit to all those who live by any branch of horticulture."

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The weather became seasonable last week and now it is 10 degrees to 15 degrees warmer than normal for the third week in June. With temperatures of 88 degrees June 16 and 92 degrees June 17, following weeks of unseasonable cold, the state of the market may readily be imagined. Ever since Decoration day receipts have been adequate to all the needs of the market, and in the last week supplies have so increased that it was utterly hopeless to clear them out through legitimate channels. Crops came on at once with all the producers, and every grower is cutting from a much larger proportion of his place than is usual at this season. The result is that the receipts for the last week have been the heaviest ever recorded in the whole history of the great central market. The heavy supplies have been coincident with increased cuts by all the local growers who look to Chicago for a part of their supplies, and coincident with the decline in business which marks the latter half of June. The result is that the shipping trade is much lighter than a week ago and local demand is largely from the Greeks, although the first-class stores still are having a few good wedding decorations which call for special stock.

There is an overabundant supply of all varieties of roses and the quality has been affected by the heat, most of the stock being soft and small and Maids losing their color. Kaiserin now is coming into its own. There are some splendid Richmond, Chatenay and Killarney.

The carnation market has been flooded. Prices are down to the summer level and there are reports of sales which, all things considered, are lower than ever were known for so good carnations in this market. Stock has been shipped out at prices which did not pay for the time of the packer and clean-up sales have been made to the Greeks at as low as a nickel a bunch. Even at these prices it has been impossible to clean out all of the receipts and there has been much waste, one lot of 6,000 flowers finding its way to the dump on Monday.

The local peonies are arriving and the market can consume only a small part of each day's receipts. Prices are down to a point where it hardly seems as though the growers could make anything out of any but the best blooms or those cut in such condition as to be storable. At $5 per thousand peonies are not the gold mine some growers expected to find them. At the same time really first-class bunches are selling at profitable prices and stuff suitable for storage is going into the freezer in lots of thousands of dozens. There will be peonies in this market for many weeks, probably later than ever before, and last year we had peonies in August. The chance for a profitable market is not bad, for asters and other outdoor flowers will be late.

The sweet pea market is as badly glutted as any other department. One house received 30,000 June 18. The fancy flowers are selling well, but there always is a large quantity left after the legitimate demand is supplied, which the basket vendors get at their own prices. Gladioli are slow sale.

The general opinion among the wholesalers is that now that average returns

Headquarters for GOOD SUMMER STOCK

The Kind that "Fills the Bill" In Hot Weather

Several of our growers run a part of their houses expressly to get a good cut in summer, realizing that there is a large and steady demand in summer for the best grades of flowers. If your own stock is running out, so is that of other growers, except ours, grown expressly for summer cutting. Try US now or any time this summer, when you want special quality.

are so low, the growers quickly will begin the work of replanting the worn out stock and, therefore, supplies will be greatly reduced. The same process out in the country will tend to stimulate the demand and it is thought that the glut will be of short duration. We shall have no period of high prices, but there will be some stability to the market before a great many days have passed.

New ferns have reached this market and the scarcity in this department is at an end.

Albert Amling Incorporates.

The Albert F. Amling Co., Maywood, has been incorporated with $50,000 capital stock, by Albert F. Amling, William Collatz and Caroline Amling. Mr. Collatz is a grower and neighbor of Albert F. Amling. It is reported that the Collatz place will be taken over by a brother of Albert F. and E. C. Amling, from Milwaukee, who has been planning to go into the greenhouse business, and that Mr. Collatz will actively join Albert F. Amling, becoming the grower in charge of the plant. Mr. Amling has several outside interests, being vice-president of the Maywood bank, etc.

Club Meeting.

Considering that this is an exceptionally busy season, there was an excellent attendance at the club meeting June 13. The amendment to the by-laws, changing the date of election, was carried. Nomination now comes in December, election in January and the new officers will take hold in February.

In discussing the plant trade for this season, J. F. Klimmer, of Oak Park, says it has been most satisfactory and he thinks that when he gets through the total will be ahead of last year. He said it was hard to get geraniums in bloom. He had a quantity of forget-me-nots and stocks outside which did not come into bloom on account of late hard frosts and he figures that he is out about $500 on this account. Mr. Fischer, of Evanston, expressed himself as being well satisfied with the season's plant trade and thinks it is not all over yet; others spoke in the same vein.

Mr. Fischer proposed a picnic and Mr. Waters put it in the form of a motion, which was carried. August Poehlmann invited the club to hold its picnic at Morton Grove and the club voted to accept. The president appointed as a picnic committee, J. C. Vaughan, T. E. Waters, August Poehlmann, George Asmus, A. I. Simmons, H. E. Klunder, and Ed Enders.

The Rose Society affairs were reported hanging fire pending some conclusion as to just how general an affair the March show can be made.

Adjournment was to September, but there will doubtless be a special meeting just before the S. A. F. convention.

Lyrata Sprays.

John T. Muir calls attention to the effectiveness of Lyrata sprays as used in his decoration for the Swift-Fitzgerald wedding at the St. James church and the Kenwood Club. He used eighteen cases of this green as a substitute for wild smilax and has no regret that the latter green is now practically out of the market for the season. The cut stock used in the decoration was principally white peonies and yellow roses. Quite a number of palms, of course, were called for.

Carnation Plants.

J. P. Brooks, of Morton Grove, says that he is not at all sure of the prospects for carnation crops for the good market which usually comes early in the autumn. He says that although his stock was planted in the field at least as early as any in this vicinity, and appears to have escaped all damage by frost, still the plants have stood practically still and are nowhere near as large as they were at this date last year. He says the stock is not at all in need of topping at the present time, while last year he had topped practically every plant by June 10. He looks for the plants to be distressingly small by the usual date of housing, although this warm weather will make them jump.

Various Notes.

C. O. Erickson, at Glen Ellyn, has about 8,000 feet of glass which he devotes entirely to carnations, only two varieties, Boston Market and Lawson. He expressed himself as well satisfied with the season. Next year he will have a few Enchantress and a few White Perfection, but he does not believe in growing a large list of sorts.

The telephone company, in its efforts to gain support for its proposed franchise, has been publishing the numbers of flat rate telephones, charges for which will be reduced under the measured rate plan. The numbers of some of the builders, boiler-makers, etc., have appeared, but the number of no wholesale florist has been included. They all will have more to pay.

The George Wittbold Co. is tearing down the two oldest houses at Buckingham place and will put up one modern structure in their stead.

N. J. Wietor, who takes a philosophic view of things, says he makes no protest at cutting down to summer prices. He says that since he has been in business he never has seen a season when prices have held up as well as they have this spring.

C. M. Dickinson, of Hunt's, thinks it would be of great value if reliable statistics could be published each week as to the receipts of cut stock in this market. He believes it would not only show how great the market really is in point of quantities of stock handled, but that it would show the growers a number of good opportunities.

Henry Bentlage was found, June 12, dead in the barn back of the greenhouses of Anton Then, where he had hanged himself. Bentlage was 30 years of age and had been employed for some time by Mr. Then. It is reported that he had made a previous attempt at self-destruction.

P. J. Hauswirth had the decoration for the banquet of the Credit Men's Association at the Auditorium June 14. The guests numbered 1,000 and American Beauty roses were largely used in the decoration.

E. F. Winterson Co. has announced that the cut flower department will be open from 7 a. m. to 9 p. m. each day but Sunday and Tuesday in June. The reason for closing earlier on Sunday may be readily surmised, but why Tuesday should be excepted would not be plain to those who overlook the fact that on that evening the Chicago florists bowl—E. F. Winterson is one of the regulars and it is he who stays on duty evenings.

J. D. Thompson was in from Joliet Monday, buying supplies for the new store he individually, not the Thompson Carnation Co., has opened. He says it is the best equipped store west of Chicago and that he expects to do a fine trade.

E. E. Pieser, of Kennicott Bros. Co., says he expects the next week to see more peonies in this market than the town had in the height of any previous year; peony growers have multiplied faster even than the plants do.

C. L. Washburn says that in spite of the splendid prospects for peony crops, locally, he is afraid the growers will find many of the buds soft and containing nothing which will develop into a flower. This was the way with the southern crop.

John Poehlmann says that, although the shipping trade has slacked off considerably, there still is a good call for special roses. Killarney brings a better price than any except Beauty.

E. C. Amling says that the scarcity of asparagus strings is making itself felt in the largely increased sale for smilax.

John Zech says he looks for a fair market for good roses to develop before the week is over.

George Reinberg on Monday cut several dozens of fine cattleyas from the new house of orchids.

J. A. Budlong's are getting a steadily increasing cut from their young Beauties. They have planted largely of grafted Bride and Maid again this year.

Matt Mann is this week just in the midst of a big crop of Enchantress. His production is nearly ten times what it was ten days ago. The stock is excellent for so late in the season.

F. F. Benthley points out that Killarney is holding its color splendidly in the hot weather and is the popular rose with the leading retailers. He says that at New Castle the Benthley-Coatsworth Co. will in a few days be cutting from young Beauties and also soon from young Brides and Maids. On Monday they began replanting that part of the range not replanted for the purpose of getting a summer crop.

When the mercury begins to cavort among the 90's A. L. Randall's thoughts turn to his Michigan fruit farm. He usually goes there in July and this year says he will have a first-class crop of grapes and about half a crop of peaches to market.

N. J. Wietor and John Sinner expect to go next week on their annual fishing expedition to Tomahawk lake.

Sinner Bros. are cutting a big crop of Brides and Maids.

Peter Reinberg is rebuilding twelve of the oldest houses at his Robey street establishment. These are only about seven years old and were in what most growers would think to be first-class condition, but Mr. Reinberg is satisfied with nothing other than the high iron gutters. As soon as the rebuilding is completed, work will be begun on the new range out on "the farm."

On Monday C. W. McKellar received 3,000 blooms of Festiva maxima peony from J. F. Rosenfield, at West Point, Neb.

E. F. Winterson states that on Monday his concern already had 72,000 peonies in cold storage. The quantity of peonies stored this year, taking the market as a whole, will be much greater than ever before.

Leopold Koropp has bought all the peony blooms to be cut this year at the Peterson Nursery. The purchase includes 5,000 blooms of Festiva maxima from plants four and five years old that carry their buds four feet from the ground.

The entire staff of Vaughan & Sperry is hard at work these days. As soon as the morning's rush of selling is over, all hands turn in and re-bunch peonies.

To the Trade....

We append a price list which is, in our best judgment, what prices will be until you hear from us again.

If you read the trade papers you will see the price lists are nearly all alike. This is because we must have our "copy" ready by Tuesday, and Monday's selling price is a basis for the coming week's trade papers.

Be this as it may, we send out a price list, but we always bill at Chicago selling price at time of shipment.

Always keep in mind that we are your agents and while we receive a great quantity of stock, all is not of shipping grade, and if we are out we will get it for you if it is to be had in Chicago.

year; peony growers have multiplied faster even than the plants do.

C. L. Washburn says that in spite of the splendid prospects for peony crops, locally, he is afraid the growers will find many of the buds soft and containing nothing which will develop into a flower. This was the way with the southern crop.

John Poehlmann says that, although the shipping trade has slackened off considerably, there still is a good call for special roses. Killarney brings a better price than any except Beauty.

E. C. Amling says that the scarcity of asparagus strings is making itself felt in the largely increased sale for smilax.

John Zeeh says he looks for a fair market for good roses to develop before the week is over.

George Reinberg on Monday cut several dozens of fine cattleyas from the new house of orchids.

J. A. Budlong's are getting a steadily increasing cut from their young Beauties. They have planted largely of grafted Bride and Maid again this year.

Matt Mann is this week just in the midst of a big crop of Enchantress. His production is nearly ten times what it was ten days ago. The stock is excellent for so late in the season.

F. F. Benthley points out that Killarney is holding its color splendidly in the hot weather and is the popular rose with the leading retailers. He says that at New Castle the Benthley-Coatsworth Co. will in a few days be cutting from young Beauties and also soon from young Brides and Maids. On Monday they began replanting that part of the range not replanted for the purpose of getting a summer crop.

When the mercury begins to cavort among the 90's A. L. Randall's thoughts turn to his Michigan fruit farm. He usually goes there in July and this year says he will have a first-class crop of grapes and about half a crop of peaches to market.

N. J. Wietor and John Sinner expect to go next week on their annual fishing expedition to Tomahawk lake.

Sinner Bros. are cutting a big crop of Brides and Maids.

Peter Reinberg is rebuilding twelve of the oldest houses at his Robey street establishment. These are only about seven years old and were in what most growers would think to be first-class condition, but Mr. Reinberg is satisfied with nothing other than the high iron gutters. As soon as the rebuilding is completed, work will be begun on the new range out on "the farm."

On Monday C. W. McKellar received 3,000 blooms of Festiva maxima peony from J. F. Rosenfield, at West Point, Neb.

E. F. Winterson states that on Monday his concern already had 72,000 peonies in cold storage. The quantity of peonies stored this year, taking the market as a whole, will be much greater than ever before.

In this way they get out a large quantity for storage that would have to be sacrificed unless worked over.

Mrs. J. T. Helbok started June 17 for a visit at her old home in Germany. She will return in September accompanied by a niece of Mrs. Frank Beu, a girl of 15 years, who will make her home with Mrs. Beu.

Fred Struvy has taken his son-in-law, George Green, into partnership and intends that the business shall be pushed harder than ever, while he himself takes life easier. Mr. Struvy always has said he intended to retire when he was 55 years old. He has to keep busy only to July 14.

Mrs. E. H. Hunt departed June 18 for a visit at Akron, O.

A. C. Kohlbrand, at Amling's, was at Gray's lake June 16 and reports the fishing good.

Apparently a great many sweet pea growers picked early Sunday morning and left the stock till Monday in water. The flowers will not stand it this hot weather, for Monday afternoon those still in the wholesalers' hands were many of them in exceedingly bad shape.

Among the week's visitors were C. J. Ohmer, of Cincinnati, on his way home from a trip to the Pacific coast; F. L. Tornquist, Benton Harbor, Mich., buying material for a new greenhouse.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

We are enjoying the genuine thing. Summer has arrived, exactly as predicted last Saturday morning. The result on the market has been depressing. It is not easy to produce high-grade flowers in hot weather, from plants that have bloomed all winter. The growers are giving this up as a bad proposition, one by one, and the wholesalers confess that they are heartily glad of it. The best flowers, those that are given especial care, or that have not produced heavy crops during the winter, are selling fairly well. Beauties, valley, orchids, and possibly gardenias, are most in demand. Local business is dull, while shipping is fairly active. A true conception of the market can best be obtained by slightly changing Tennyson's famous lines to read:

Peonies to the right of us,
 Peonies to the left of us,
 Peonies to the front of us,
 Onward they come.

Unfortunately many of them reach the market too far advanced, rendering it almost impossible to dispose of them at any figure. Conservative judges believe that the local growers will not average anything like the prices of former seasons on their peony crop. Southern growers have, of course, had a record season.

The various odds and ends of summer flowers can be had in quantity; they rarely realize high prices. Pyrethrums, sweet william, hemerocallis, iris, and the belated Japanese snowballs give some idea of the flowers meant.

The Demand for Plants.

This season has been remarkably favorable for the plantmen. They were favorable, as none of them dared to hope, by a week of wonderful weather preceding Easter. They were further favored by the long spring, which gave them time to get their succeeding crops into condition, and now they are experiencing what cricketers term a second inning of unexpected length. The demand for crotons, begonias, ferns and nearly all varieties of plants suitable for window-boxes, porch decoration, and sub-tropical bedding, has been unprecedented. This demand is partly local and partly shipping, the latter due to the fame of our plantmen throughout the country. There really seems danger of overselling, rendering certain varieties and sizes of other varieties scarce when the demand sets in next fall.

The Florex Gardens.

Leo Niessen once said that Mr. Fuers-tenberg had progressive ideas that would keep him ahead of the times. These words were recalled vividly to Phil's mind when he alighted from the train at North Wales this week and saw the mammoth greenhouse now almost completed by the Florex Gardens. I will not give you a description of how to reach North Wales. It will be time enough for that when you come to the Philadelphia convention next August. Then, too, Job, who is a regular reader, objects to descriptions of how I reach my destination.

The first impression created by this large house is one of wonder at its extent. This impression increases as you approach the entrance. The height is said to be thirty-two feet, and I have no doubt this is accurate to an inch, but as you look up standing in the doorway you feel that it is more like sixty-four feet. The impression of great height is probably increased by the gently sloping sides, the angle, if I remember rightly, being about 30 degrees, more or less. The width is 156 feet; the length from 456 feet at one side to 525 feet at the other. These figures are merely repetition of what has appeared in these columns before and convey but a faint idea of the impression when seeing the house itself.

The work of construction is almost finished. The glaziers are following closely behind the builders. The carpenters have erected some of the benches and are pushing on with others. The growers have filled with soil the tables so far erected and are planting the first of the 45,000 Beauties required to fill the house. A baby sister house, about 30x130 feet, is used for growing on the plants so far received until they shall be required for planting out on the tables.

Various Notes.

The regular monthly meeting of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society has been changed from Tuesday to Thursday evening of this week. The peony and rose show to be held in connection with this meeting will be continued on Friday for the benefit of the general public.

Sydney Hoffman, of Boston, was a visitor in this city a few days ago.

Miss Wilson and Oglesby Paul will be married in Trinity church, Boston, Saturday, June 22.

Wm. Warner Harper has issued an invitation to inspect the peony show at the Andorra Nurseries June 15 to 25. Many rare varieties may be seen there.

Edward Reid has a showy addition to the list in the shape of gladioli in assorted colors on long stems.

M. Rice & Co. report business far ahead of last season for June. The demand appears to be general and not confined to any specialties.

Wm. Munro, of Garrettsford, is sending fancy Kaiserins to W. E. McKissick.

The steamers Barcelona and Manitou, just arrived, have brought large consignments of straw and willow baskets, plants, cycas leaves, etc., for H. Bayersdorfer & Co. Mr. Berkowitz reports that advices from Europe indicate a general scarcity of raw material used in making florists' supplies, due to the cold season. This has led to higher prices.

Thomas J. Oberlin, of Sinking Spring, Pa., is sending some fine Pæonia Festiva maxima and white pyrethrums to the S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co.

Answers to Correspondents.

Review readers are invited to send any questions relating to culture or marketing of plants and flowers in Philadelphia, to Phil, in care of any of the leading seed or commission houses. Each question will be submitted to a competent person and answered under number. Correct name and address must always accompany inquiry, but will not be published.

81. Will you please tell me what caused my sweet pea buds to fade and fall off? The vines are healthy and apparently there is nothing the matter with them. They have ample air and moisture, but during the last two or three weeks hundreds of buds have withered. I have four rows in the center bed of my violet house, running north and south, each row eighty feet long, and the vines are now five feet high and look fine.

A. This cannot be accounted for in any way except the tendency of sweet peas to lose their first set buds, as do some other plants when in a too vigorous condition of growth. It may be induced largely by the dark, cold weather of the last few weeks; another cause is over-feeding at this stage. PHIL.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The market was active last week and the retailers enjoyed a splendid trade in furnishing bouquets and decorations for weddings and commencements. Cupid has been busy all this month and whenever this chap is busy the florists are happy. Some of the stores also reported a good lot of funeral work.

The market was well supplied with everything. The only scarcity was in the fancy grades of roses. Of lower grades of roses the market has an oversupply. Killarney sells well when fancy. Carnations, too, were in oversupply. White has been selling better than colored stock. Sweet peas have also come down in price, as the market is becoming glutted with them. Lily of the valley is having a good call. Candidum lilies are now in and sell well. Outdoor stuff is not bringing much. Both fancy and common ferns are plentiful, as is smilax and other greens.

Club Meeting.

The meeting of the Florists' Club June 13 was largely attended, by growers, retailers and wholesalers. Great interest has been taken of late in the club's social affairs and its discussions, there being no less than fifteen important queries which came up for debate at this meeting. The question box has become one of the features of the meetings.

The trustees reported that all arrangements have been completed for the twentieth anniversary celebration June 29. They also reported that the annual picnic will be held at Ramonia park July 25, the same place as last year.

Conard Bergstermann was elected to membership and Adolph Brix made application. State Vice-president W. C. Young, of the S. A. F., addressed the members regarding the attendance at the coming convention at Philadelphia. W. A. Hastings, of North Cambridge, Mass., was present and gave the members a short talk.

The discussion on fumigation was again taken up and several of the members related their experience since the last meeting and a great deal of knowledge was obtained from the remarks of Messrs. Ammann, Fulgrafe, Wm. Young,

C. L. Hammerstein, secretary of the school board, reports that the board will erect greenhouses this summer on ground in the west end and also grow nursery stock for the various schools. The two gardeners who are now taking care of the Central and McKinley high school conservatories will be in charge. They are C. I. Page and Emil Loewmann.

Geo. Ostertag, superintendent of the city parks, reports that they have completed their bedding. It is thought that when Park Commissioner Scanlan sends in his new appointments, Mr. Ostertag will be reappointed.

F. W. Ude, Jr., Wm. Winter, of Kirkwood, and E. W. Guy, of Belleville, visited Fred Ammann, at Edwardsville, and Henry Johann, at Collinsville, June 15. They reported a good time and say each of these places is in tip-top shape.

Henry Lohrenz, proprietor of the Park Floral Co., complains that the growers around St. Louis did not grow enough bedding stock this year, as the shortage was noticeable at all places. He says the growers were not aware of the increasing population of our city, and that they should be guided by this for next season.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Warm weather at last seems to have arrived and as a consequence more flowers are arriving than for a long time. Business was the reverse of good during the whole of last week, but the school graduations, weddings, etc., will help to tone it up this week.

Roses are abundant, but meet with a fair sale. Carnations also are good for the season, with a wide range in prices, colored varieties of both roses and carnations having first call. This June no Jacqueminot or other hybrid roses will be available for graduations and few will be in bloom during the present month unless very hot weather continues.

Peonies are arriving, but single ones are seen. No double to speak of will be in bloom during the present week. They will be late for the June week, and likely to meet with a poor sale when they do arrive.

Some nice outdoor varieties are still seen and there is a good supply of the forced article. Sweet peas are quite abundant, but not of the quality seen a few weeks ago. Outdoor ones will not be in season before July this year. There are plenty of lilies and a good supply of miscellaneous flowers, many of which meet with a slow sale.

Rhododendron Show.

The postponed rhododendron show was held June 15 and there was a fine display of seasonable flowers. Walter Hunnewell, T. D. Hatfield gardener, made the largest exhibit of named rhododendrons, filling several tables with cut trusses, and also having a number of nice plants in pots. A few of the best hardy sorts included in his collection were Lady Gray Egerton, Album elegans, Everestianum, Caractacus, Charles Dickens, E. D. Rand, Lady Armstrong, Delicatissima, Kettledrum, King of the Blues, Mrs. Milner, H. W. Sargent, Henrietta Sargent and Mrs. C. S. Sargent. A fine table was also staged by Mrs. J. L. Gardner, William Thatcher gardener, and a smaller collection of rhododendrons and azaleas by Mrs. R. A. Leeson, James Cartwright gardener.

James McKissick received honorable mention for a fine lot of tree peonies. Professor C. S. Sargent, Charles Sander gardener, showed a large table of splendid seedling tree peonies. Mrs. D. J. Greenough showed some white flowered ones of superb quality. William Whitman, M. Sullivan gardener, and others also showed peonies.

T. C. Thurlow took first prize for thirty-six vases of German iris, W. Whittman being second. William Thatcher, gardener to Mrs. J. L. Gardner, received first prize, a silver gilt medal, for table of orchids and foliage plants. Robert Cameron received honorable mention for Cereus Eyresii four years old from seed.

Frederic J. Rea had a nice table of herbaceous flowers and a large display came from Blue Hill Nurseries. In the latter collection Thalictrum Delavayi, Incarvillea grandiflora and Arenaria Montana each received honorable mention.

C. W. Parker showed Iris Pallida Dalmatica. Mrs. E. M. Gill had a nice collection of seasonable flowers, and George Page iris and other flowers. R. & J. Farquhar had a large table of cut aquilegias in variety, another of German iris and a third contained a fine collection of herbaceous flowers in variety and a number of late tulips.

The Boston park department had a vase of cut branches of Bechtel's double flowered crab apple.

Club Meeting.

All records for attendance in 1907 were broken on June 18, when some 200 members gathered to hear C. H. Totty's interesting and practical talk on "The Chrysanthemum, Its Past, Present and Future." An excellent discussion followed the reading of the paper and Mr. Totty was given a rousing vote of thanks for it. Those who participated in discussion were Messrs. Wheeler, Fewkes, W. Wheeler, D. Finlayson, Elliott, Craig Grey, Cartwright, Sherwood and Anderson.

It was stated that a field day will be held at Bay State Nurseries, with W. H. Wyman, during August, and at the W. Rawson Co. dahlia farm, in Marblehead, September 20; also an invitation to visit the same place was accepted. It was voted to participate in the Boston home week celebration, and a committee consisting of Mr.

D. Finlayson, Pettigrew, Elliott and Anderson was appointed on same. The membership was further swelled by eight new names and the exhibition table contained a lot of interesting seasonable flowers, from R. W. Wheeler and T. H. Westwood. T. D. Hatfield showed a yellow chrysanthemum in flower. It was, as usual, late before the best meeting of the year terminated. No meetings will be held during July and August.

The Boston Park System.

We never saw the extensive shrubberies in the Boston park department look fresher and more vigorous than during a drive through them last week. Thanks to the copious rains and absence of torrid weather, while everything looked delightfully luxuriant there was an absence of the customary ravages of destructive insects, against expected attacks of which spraying operations were in progress. While the season is about two weeks later than usual, one good effect of the cool weather is seen in the long period the shrubs are remaining in bloom.

Especially striking were the Loniceras, the numerous specimens of L. Morrowi in Franklin park being a wonderful sight. This beautiful park grows more attractive each year. Lonicera tatarica in several forms, L. Ruprechtiana and L. fragrantissima were all fine. Some of the viburnums were already in flower. Staphylea colchica was fine, also Exochorda grandiflora and that somewhat uncertain variety, Zanthoceras sorbifolia, with white, bell-shaped flowers borne on upright spikes. Kerria Japonica was one of the few shrubs which was hurt by the recent winter and was cut to the snow line except in a few sheltered spots.

The rhododendrons and azaleas were both coming into flower and promised a fine display in a few days. Berberis vulgaris and its hybrids, Spiraea Van Houttei and some of the euonymus were all in season. Near the shore of Jamaica pond, adjoining the Parkman estate, we noted a magnificent specimen of Bechtel's double crab, the finest of the whole genus. Malus coronaria, also in flower, is very attractive.

Mr. Pettigrew is now using crude petroleum on a large portion of the park driveways for the dust nuisance and the results are proving satisfactory.

Various Notes.

At Professor C. S. Sargent's the lilacs last week were a magnificent sight. A large specimen of that fine dark variety, Philemon, was the acme of perfection, the best flowered specimen it was ever my privilege to see. Charles Dickens, Souv. de Ludwig Spath, Marie Legraye and other sorts were almost equally fine. Specimens of the Chinese lilac, Syringa Chinensis, were also wonderfully good. The rock garden, with myosotis, Phlox divaricata, Primula Sieboldii, violas and many other spring flowers, was attractive. A large bed of seedling tree peonies, five and six years old, from seed, contained a wealth of good things. The large collection of specimen azaleas and wistarias were, as usual, flowered in Mr. Sander's best style.

Prof. C. S. Sargent sailed for England June 19, to be absent until August.

A note with regard to the incorporation of the Thomas J. Grey Co. appears in the seed trade department of this issue.

tion in the evening of May 27, and another for a few minutes in the first days of June. Mr. Dery says his sales for May and June will certainly show an increase of fifty per cent over the sales for the same months last year.

CHARLES R. MILLHAM, of the Cleveland Seed Co., Avon, N. Y., is calling on the trade on his way home from a visit to the Pacific coast. He says that the seed crops in the Santa Clara valley and the beans in the southern part of the state were in most luxuriant growth at the middle of June but that the weather was dark and damp.

It is reported that some seed establishments having numerous travelers on the road, are seriously thinking of uniting in a withdrawal of fixed prices on a number of families of seeds, as for example, peas and beans, as well as onion seed, and possibly corn and vine crops, the crops of which hang in jeopardy by reason of the unpropitious weather conditions covering the whole country.

PEA AND BEAN PRICES.

A well-known pea and bean grower, none known better, writes as follows to a wholesale seedsman with whom he has contracts: "Peas were sown about a month late and we cannot hope to get more than a small crop. If any of your friends want to send their travelers out in June and July this year and take orders for next winter's delivery at low prices, don't get nervous, but let them go ahead, and the punishment which they bring upon themselves will last them longer than any lecture you can give them."

HOLLAND BULB CROPS.

Seldom, if ever, have bulb crops at the beginning of June been so free from disease and so little of the blight in the foliage of the tulips as was the case this year. The warm and dry weather of the last two weeks of May no doubt did a great deal of good in this respect, and from the present outlook a good crop of tulips may be expected, but the crocus crop, which is still in its growing state, is extremely poor. Hyacinths are also looking well, with the exception of some sorts that suffered from the last keen frost and, besides, this crop needs nearly all of the month of June to come to full maturity, and a sudden change in the weather may turn the scales. Narcissi are also looking well generally, but as the acreage planted out this season is considerably smaller than last season, a good crop will be needed to meet the expected demand.

The spring planted gladioli are nearly all well above ground and it is apparent that such gladioli as Colvillei will be a short crop, as most of them are looking weak, as if they had suffered from the severe and late winter, while many of the ranunculus are turning yellow already before having come into bloom and have not been able to withstand the severe night frosts we had in May, says a Holland correspondent in the Horticultural Trade Journal.

EUROPEAN CROPS.

Cooper, Taber & Co., of London, have issued a report of crop conditions as respects those sorts grown last autumn and carried over the winter, all of which have suffered more or less injury from very unpropitious climatic conditions in Europe. For example, only twenty-five to thirty-five per cent of a crop of beet seed can be looked for, and of carrot only from twenty to sixty per cent of a crop, according to varieties and location, Danvers being the worst, as it promises only one-fifth of normal expectations. Rutabaga in general suffered so badly that the prognostications are for an exceedingly short crop of seed. Of cabbage Winnigstadt only promises half a crop.

Of course it is too early for them to say anything about the spring sown crops.

IMPORTS.

The imports of seeds through the port of New York for the week ending June 8 were as follows:

Kind.	Bags.	Val.	Kind	Bags.	Val.
Caraway	200	$ 1,485	Hemp	200	$ 935
Castor	2,899	12,906	Millet	500	1,171

PRIZE OFFERS.

One of the matters which will occupy the attention of the Seed Trade Association at the meeting in New York next week is the subject of the post-office ruling on prize offers. This is made necessary by the action, last February, of the Chicago postmaster, who excluded from the mails the catalogue of Montgomery Ward & Co. because of the prizes offered therein. The department at Washington upheld the Chicago postmaster.

Charles N. Page, chairman of the Seed Trade Association's committee on postal laws, when he read in the REVIEW of the action of the department, asked Ward & Co. for full particulars, and Mr. Thorne, head of the big mail order concern, confirmed the facts as stated in the REVIEW and added that in so far as Ward & Co. were concerned the matter was settled and a thing of the past. Since then Mr. Page has permitted the subject to rest in the belief that any speedy attempt to get a ruling from the department would only result in confirming the one made in Ward's case. The subject must shortly be taken up, however, if seedsmen are to know what if any prize offers they are to be permitted to use in the 1908 books.

The interdicted Ward offers were for the largest or best specimen grown from seed of a given variety purchased from them. The post-office objected to the limiting of the offer to the product of seed bought of the one who offered the prize. As to this possibly W. Atlee Burpee voices the general view as concisely as it can be stated, and his experience in all details of the catalogue business and the mail trade makes his opinion of value. He says: "We noted the item regarding the action of the post-office authorities in holding up the catalogue of Montgomery Ward & Co. and fail to under-offered by Montgomery Ward & Co. The prizes are paid for merit and we should not think the stipulation that the varieties must be grown from seeds purchased from Montgomery Ward & Co. would make them subject in any way to the rulings against lottery."

In presenting the matter at Washington it is understood that Ward & Co. set up the claim that their prize offers were no different from those of dozens of other seedsmen.

The St. Louis Seed Co., St. Louis, Mo., who issue one of the catalogues it is understood Montgomery Ward & Co. filed with the post-office department for comparison of prize offers, writes as follows:

"Concerning the serious trouble between the post-office and Montgomery Ward & Co., will say we consider this an injustice to the seedsmen and fail at the present time to see just where the postoffice can hold them. We have offered prizes for specimens and yieldings, together with photographs, for a number of years, the same as a great many other seedsmen do, and have mailed our catalogue from other post-offices where they were printed, and we have never so far had any trouble of this kind. We sincerely hope that we never shall, nor that this privilege will be discontinued by the post-office. There has been trouble with some seed companies, such as A. A. Berry, of Clarinda, Ia., who had a guessing contest in their catalogue. This we believe to be against the rules of the post-office. We sincerely hope that this matter will be adjusted in the favor of the seedsmen, so that they will be thoroughly understood before our future catalogues go to press."

It is probable that the old offers still would pass at most offices but the expense and delay involved if they are held up, as was Ward's book, make a thorough understanding of the matter necessary. The case serves to show to the seed trade the inequality of the post-office rules long complained of by newspaper publishers. At three or four of the largest offices there are officers charged with seeing that the infinity of rules with regard to newspaper mail are lived up to, and publishers who mail at these offices are held to the strict letter of the law, while those who mail at smaller post-offices where the censorship is left to officers who have other duties as well, are not interfered with so long as they keep anywhere within reason. It was the same condition which resulted in holding up Ward's book and letting others, at smaller offices, go out with exactly the same offers in almost the same words. The rules are the same for all but the enforcement is different.

THE IOWA LAW.

The new law prohibiting the sale of goods containing noxious seeds in Iowa does not cover mail order shipments and the members of the Iowa Seed Dealers' Association are reported to be much alarmed at the prospect of low-priced competition.

The Iowa law, it is claimed, will work many hardships on dealers within the state in competition for home trade. The goods they put on the market must bear the pure seed label and come up to its standard. Iowa dealers handling seeds in bulk or packages for retail trade must also comply with these provisions. However, outside firms selling their goods by catalogue do not have to comply with it.

A lower grade of seeds can thus be sold by the mail order firms at a lower price than Iowa dealers can quote on the more expensive grades which they are obliged to supply according to the law. Unless the buyers are educated to discriminate in behalf of good seeds, the Iowa business will be practically monopolized by the outside houses, with their bargain-counter prices.

State Dairy Commissioner Wright will have charge of the enforcement of the pure seed law, which goes into effect July 4.

HYBRID FREESIAS.

The first stimulus to the raising of hybrid freesias was the introduction of Freesia Armstrongi, by W. Armstrong, who found it wild at Humansdorp, Cape Colony. The tubers sent to Kew flowered there about seven or eight years ago, and, being so distinct from other freesias in cultivation, they at once attracted a good deal of attention. The main points in which F. Armstrongi differs from the well-known F. refracta alba are its taller and more slender foliage, the color of its blossoms, and the fact that the latter are quite scentless. In color the flowers of Freesia Armstrongi are lilac-pink, which deepens towards the edges of the segments, while the throat is lighter colored, and there is a characteristic patch of yellow in the interior. Though this species has not become common, it is now fairly well known, and can be obtained from many bulb dealers.

SWAINSONA.

Will you kindly let me know if swainsona cut back will do better than new plants? C. A. M.

I presume the white Swainsona galegifolia is referred to. If the plants are in pots I would decidedly prefer young stock. The cuttings are easily rooted and grow quickly. If in boxes or planted out in a bed, it will be better to prune back the plants. Remove some of the old surface soil and give them a liberal

All Live and Up-to-date Florists Grow These

The forcing of cold storage lilies is no longer an experiment. If you have not already grown some of these we can refer you to hundreds of florists who make a success of this method and have lilies "all the year round"—the same as Lily of the Valley.

Our lilies are bought for and placed in cold storage for the express purpose of delivering bulbs in the summer time.

Lilium longiflorum and giganteum take about two months to bloom from time of planting from cold storage; speciosum from five to six months, so that longiflorum wanted for Thanksgiving and Christmas should be planted about Oct. 1, and speciosum and auratum about July 1.

We have limited quantities of the following varieties on hand and offer subject to being unsold and at the prices named. Will hold not later than Oct. 1 for our customers without any additional charges for cold storage. ORDER TODAY.
